CALUMET Baking Powder

A perfectly healthful powder made by improved chemical methods and of accurately proportioned materials.

Trust Baking Powders sell for 45 or 50 cents per pound and may be identified by this exorbitant price. They are a menace to public health, as food prepared from them contains large quantities of Rochelle salts, a dangerous cathartic drug.

LOST HIS LIFE IN THE RIVER.

FRED GILLMAN OF PLOVER DOWNS WHILE SWIMMING.

A Companion Attempts to save his life but Fails.—Drowned Man was able to Swim but a little. Had been Working on the Dam.

Fred G. Gillman, who had been working on the dam for the Consolidated Water power Company, was drowned on Thursday evening while in swimming with two companions.

The deceased was about 24 years of age and came here from Plover, being a son of Mr. and Mrs. George Gillman of that place. The father of the young man came here the next morning after the accident and left the same day for home with the remains.

Two companions were swimming with young Gillman. One of these could not swim, and the other, who was a fairly good swimmer, made a heroic effort to save the drowning man, but was unable to do so on account of the fact that the young fellow was a very poor swimmer himself and instead of aiding his would-be rescuer, fought against his attempts to help him.

The morning after the drowning a coroners jury was impanelled by Justice Cooper which viewed the remains and listened to the testimony of all the persons who had been present at the time, and they rendered a verdict of accidental drowning.

G. A. Bozlee of Stevens Point was one of the men who was with Gillman at the time of the accident and he testified that the three had gone down to swim about eight o'clock, and after being in the water about 15 minutes he had started to go out. As he started to wade from the river he turned about and saw Gillman sink beneath the water, then come to the surface and paddle about rather weekly. He surmised that the young fellow was beyond his depth, and as he was going from the shore instead of coming toward it, he called to him to attract his attention and get him to steer for shore.

Gillman paid no attention to the calls and continued to struggle and Bozlee swam out to him and caught him by the hand. He made an effort to drag him to shore, but found that he could not swim to advantage with one hand, so pulled himself loose and allowed the drowning man to catch hold of his foot. After a brief struggle in this manner Bozlee was pulled beneath the water, and he decided that he had better save himself before they were both drowned and jerking away, swam to the shore. Gillman continued to struggle for few minutes, drifting further from shore all the time, and at last, with one despairing cry, sank beneath the water to rise no more.

Bozlee testified that there were numerous other swimmers just across the river from where they were bathing, but that they made no effort to help him, even tho he called to them repeatedly.

George Gage of Packwaukee, who also works on the dam, and was the third party in swimming, testified to about the same facts as had been told by Bozlee, but was unable to assist in the rescue for the reason that he could not swim a stroke and dared not go beyond his depth. The consequence was that he stood in the water about fifteen feet from the drowning man and could do nothing to save him.

George Kellner was also swimming near the scene of the accident, being further up the river, and when he heard the call for help, he disrobed again and swam to the place where Gillman had been struggling but a moment before, but was unable to do anything as the young man has disappeared from sight.

The body was soon recovered by Peter Diedrich and some workmen, who constructed a raft and went to the scene of the accident. The body lay in about ten or twelve feet of water. In the meantime Dr. Boorman had been called, and tho he made every possible effort to resuscitate the drowned man, life was extinct and nothing could be done. So near as could be told the body had lain in the water about forty minutes before it was recovered.

It was certainly a sad accident, and seemingly entirely unnecessary, as there is no current where it occurred, being below the cofferdam and just above the grist mill.

Chicago will Celebrate.

Chicago's Centennial Jubilee, to be given this fall, is beginning to attract attention throughout the Western States. From September 26 to Oct. 1, the city will be the scene of a series of municipal fetes such as have been equaled only in the days of the Romans

Two of the most popular features on the program will be the military parade for President Roosevelt, and a vivid reproduction of the burning of Chicago.

The parade will include United States troops from the forts of the West, the state militia, crack regiments from different parts of the country, and other uniformed organizations.

In the mimic conflagration, five hundred tons of Roman fire will be ignited simultaneously on the tops of the taller buildings within the area burned by the great fire of 1871. The skyscrapers will be especial vantage grounds for the display, and from the DeKoven street home of the famous Mrs. O'Leary, where the great fire started, there will be a big flight of bombs.

In one of the parks there will be a reproduction of Fort Dearborn, build in 1803. This was the first white man's building in the city, and it is to commemorate its construction that the Jubilee is held. Four hundred Indians, descendants of the tribes that once lived in Chicago, will hold camp about the fort and will make a daily attack on it. The structure also will be the scene of a reunion of the scattered pioneers of the city.

An industrial parade at night, brilliantly illuminated and containing many handsome floats, will be another spectacle. There also will be superb fireworks, automobile races, swimming races and water polo contests in which the participants will be the famous athletes of the country, yachting races in which the crack boats of the lakes will fight for valuable cups, and many other open-air events to which all Chicago and the surrounding country will be bidden.

The Mayor's Committee, having the Jubilee in charge, will raise more than $100,000. The railroads have pledged favorable rates, and the promise is made that Chicago will have more than five hundred thousand visitors.

Information regarding the Centennial can be secured from C. R. Macloon, Sec'y Great Northern hotel.

Carlson-Derricks.

Haus Carlson and Miss Emma Derricks were united in the holy bonds of matrimony on Thursday afternoon at the Catholic parsonage, Rev. F. VanRoasmalen officiating. They were accompanied by John Fitzgerald and Miss Lizzie Derricks, who acted in the capacity of groomsman and bridesmaid.

In the evening a large number of invited guests assembled at the home of the Mr. and Mrs. Matt Derricks, the parents of the bride, where there was a reception and dance, and a very pleasant evening was spent. The young couple have the best wishes of their many friends for their future happiness.

TEACHERS INSTITUTE.

A Large Attendance at the One Now in Progress Here.

A teachers institute opened in this city on Monday morning, at which there was an unusually large attendance for the first day, there being seventy-nine enrolled. Others have come in since then until the number now aggregates eighty-five.

The studies that are being pursued are much the same as last year, and the conductors state that those in attendance seem to have come to learn and make the best of the opportunities offered. Following are those in attendance at this writing:

Anna Patt, Mary Icke, Tena Donhart, Ella Young, Elizabeth Rowland, Rose Moham, Lillian Berard, Matie Monagan, Fern Miller, Ella Dahlke, Josie Johnson, Susie Granger, Amelia Schroedel, Olga Martinson, Mary Olson, Bertha Heiser, Lucy M. Wood, Martha Hinz, Martha Mews, Anna Thompson, Pansy A. Shortt, Carrie Leach, Zita Snider, Grace Daniels, Louisa Sweat, Josie Huber, Carolyn Waser, Anna A. Johnson, Margaret Granger, Emma Johnson, Hanna Rassmussen, Katherine Corinan, Geo. W. Rowland, Edward Pomainville, Marie LaBrot, Jennie Berard, Orah A. Nissen, Myrtle Rowland, Maud E. Burroughs, Mabelle A. Rowland, Mamie Puerner, Lilyan Couture, Emmet Hiphner, Herbert A. Brooks, Levi Townsend, Caroline Nutter, E. J. Nutter, Anna Getschall, Laura M. Death of Mrs. Brazeau.

Mrs. Carrie A. Brazeau, wife of George B. Brazeau, died at her home in Port Edwards on Friday, July 24th, from appendicitis, after an illness extending over some months.

Mrs. Brazeau had been ailing more or less for some time, and her trouble eventually developed into appendicitis To relieve her it was decided to perform an operation, which was done on the 20th instant. The operation was successful, and it was thought that she would recover, but complications set in that the attending physicians were unable to cope with, and she passed away in spite of all that could be done by human hands.

Mrs. Brazeau, whose maiden name was Carrie A. Perry, was born in Tomah on the 5th of May, 1870. She was a graduate from the Tomah high school, being of the class of 1890, and was one of the bright ones of her class. She taught school at Auburndale for one year and later at Tomah. She was married on the 16th of June, 1895, to Mr. Brazeau, and they have lived the greater part of their married life at Port Edwards. Two children have been borne to them, the first, Edward, who died in infancy, and Marion Louise, who is now ten months old.

It is probable that the death of no other one person in the village of Port Edwards could have cast the cloud of gloom over the community that was caused by the demise of Mrs. Brazeau. Loved as she was by all who knew her in a comunity where all are neighbors, her loss was felt all the more keenly. Words fail to express the sorrow or contribute to the consolation of the bereaved husband. The loss of a loving wife is beyond comparison, and the community unites in extending the most heartfelt sympathy.

The funeral was held on Sunday afternoon from the Methodist church in this city, the friends assembling at the family home at Port Edwards and then coming to this city. Many beautiful floral tributes bespoke the love and esteem in which the deceased had been held during her life. The pall bearers were Dr. D. A. Telfer, T. E. Mullen, A. G. Miller, O. W. Dodge, Clarence Jasperson and W. S. Johnson.

Among the friends and relatives from abroad who were present to attend the last sad rites were Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Broodwell and daughter of Sparta, Miss Bessie Smith, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Johnson of Tomah, Mrs. George Zenier of Asotin, Wash., Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Perry and Miss Ella Perry of Tomah, and Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Perry of Bidwell, Iowa.

Due to Cady's Fishways.

The law passed by the legislature in 1901 through the efforts of Assemblyman F. A. Cady of this county, requiring that all dams in the Yellow river, be provided with suitable fishways or passages for fish up the river, has had the effect of greatly improving the fishing in the upper course of the river. Formerly there was little or no fishing north of Pittsville, but this season many bass and pickerel have been caught in the upper portion of the stream and even in the branches. In two days fishing last week Herman Kuethe of this city caught ten bass and one pickerel weighing over fifteen pounds in all. The largest bass captured weighed two pounds and a half and the bass that was hooked but got away weighed five pounds and four ounces. Anglers from here are already taking advantage of the improvement in the Yellow as a fishing place.—Marshfield Times.

Street Fairs and Business.

Stevens Point has had her carnival and since it ended on Saturday night the merchants of that city have apparently been trying to figure out where the profit is for them, but according to all accounts are unable to do so. As an amusement feature it was a howling success, but from a business standpoint it was a decited frost.

This has been the experience in every place where these carnivals have been held. Large crowds are drawn to the city and the attractions are liberally patronized and everybody has a good time, but merchants who make the guarantee, and sometimes have to cough up liberally in order to meet a shortage, are left in the lurch.

The mere fact of a crowd being in town does not always mean that business is good. The crowd may be going without the necessities of life in order to patronize the attractions; so that business is not only dull for the few days the carnival is in progress, but it is often felt for some days afterward.

If you are looking for a wild and woolly time, with license to do things that would not be countenanced under ordinary circumstances, the carnival is a success, but from a business view point it does not seem to be much of a success. Other towns have had much the same experience, and they seldom consider the proposition a second time.

Gun Club Scores.

The gun club held several events at their grounds last Sunday afternoon, the following being the scores:

Second event, 15 birds—F. Brown 14, Drumb 12, Mosher 12, F. Boles 13, Scott 14, Nash 11, Church 10, Mason 8.

Third event, 15 birds—Brown 12, Drumb 13, Mosher 11, Boles 10, Nash 12, Mason 7, Bartholomew 5, Scott 13.

Fourth event, 15 birds—Brown 14, Drumb 9, Mosher 12, Boles 11, Nash 6, Mason 10, Scott 11, Kain 8.

Fifth event, 15 birds—Mason 13, Nash 11, Brown 14, Mosher 11, Drumb 11, Scott 11.

Sixth event, 15 birds—Mason 14, Nash 9, Brown 15, Mosher 14, Drumb 10, Scott 14.

Seventh event, 15 birds—Mason 14, Scott 14, Nash 12, Drumb 14.

A challenge has been received by the local club from the Stevens Point team and as the members here have accepted it is probable that a match between the two teams will occur in the near future.

An Exciting Runaway.

Misses Edith and Kathryn Nash had a narrow escape from serrious injury on Saturday while crossing the bridge in a buggy, and those who rushed to the scene of the accident were most agreeably surprised to find that nobody was hurt.

The affair started with a farmers team on the west side, which ran away and headed across the bridge at a good speed. When near the center of the bridge the hind wheel of the farm wagon caught the hind wheel of the buggy in which the two young ladies were seated, turning it completely over, and throwing the two ladies to the road in a very forcible manner, The buggy was a total wreck, and it seemed like a miracle to those that had witnessed the accident that the ladies escaped without injury. The runaway team was stopped on the bridge without doing any damage to themselves.

Held for Assault.

The case of the State of Wisconsin against Edward Whitney of Sherry for assault with intent to kill, was brought up for a preliminary hearing before Justice Brown on Tuesday.

The man making the complaint is Louis Jaques, also of Sherry, and and his witnesses testimony was to the effect that Whitney had assaulted him in a saloon at Sherry, and after knocking him to the ground he had kicked him, and then drawing a rock from his pocket, Whitney had beaten Jaques, wounding him severely about the head.

The justice found there was sufficient evidence to bind the prisoner over to the circuit court, which was done.

Marceau-Chandler.

Albert F. Marceau and Miss Genevieve Chandler were married on Thurday at the Catholic parsonage, Rev. F. Van Roosmalen officiating. After the ceremony a wedding dinner was served at the home of the bride's mother.

The young couple left that afternoon on the eastbound Green Bay train for a short wedding tour, after which they will return to this city and make their home here. The Tribune unites with a host of friends in wishing Mr. and Mrs. Marceau a happy journey thru life.

WAYS OF WINGED WOOERS.

Incidents Illustrating the Comical Side of Bird Life.

Writing these lines as to the fear the comical side of bird life, and methods are as varied among our feathered neighbors as among ourselves. The extremes of disunited courtship and disreputable scandalmongering were shown by two well known birds, when the presence of a rival intensified affairs.

Two purple finches, suitors for the favor of the same sparrowlike maiden, placed themselves on each side about a foot from her and offered a musical contest. First one burst into rapturous song, flying up into the air, feathers fluffed out and snowy breast and rosy shoulders more lovely than ever. The solo finished, he dropped back to his perch and politely waited, while his rival poured out his madrigal. This alternate display continued several minutes, and apparently the umpire found it hard to choose, for she evaded decision by taking flight—both suitors following.

Different was the method of two orchard orioles, one in the immature plumage of the second year, the other in the full glory of maturity. This was a wrangle, accompanied by scolding and avian vituperation from beginning to end. If the theory of selection by fine dress be true, decision should have been easy, but after a whole day's trial the fair one ended it by a truly feminine scorn of theories, eloping with her plainer suitor, leaving the gorgeous elder to console himself with another bride—which he did before the sun went down.—Collier's Weekly.

War.

There is, besides a pleasure in order, a very real fear of disorder. A mob, a fire or a runaway horse arouses a sensation of terror in the spectator quite apart from their potentiality of harm to himself. Mere force is not, as is supposed, the last argument of man. A civilized war would have more terrors for the stockjobber than the cottager were it not for the threat of ungoverned force veiled behind the punctilio of Christian fighting. We are never quite certain of an army. The disciplined brigade which nowadays captures the enemy's capital as tenderly as it would guard its own has, nevertheless, the same badges on its buttons as those which were fouled with the rape of San Sebastian and the murder of Bazeilles. It may drown its manners at any moment in a torrent of blood and tears, and statesmen and others never forget the fact. War is but the crust of the volcano. Fires of unutterable horror hum beneath. The very perfection of the discipline which controls them is evidence of man's dread of disorder, for it is only fear that wields so strongly the furnace doors.—Blackwood's.

Diplomatic Permanency.

It is likely to be the case in America that as time goes on and our relations with foreign powers become more and more complicated and pressing permanence in consular and diplomatic office, based upon knowledge and proved fitness, will be the rule. This may mean that it will not be so common a practice to take scholars and authors from private life and place them suddenly in foreign consulates and missions. But even then it is likely that our literature will be enriched by the work of men who have become authors while enjoying the opportunities for new studies and broader observation afforded by the foreign service of their country, so that if hitherto literature has contributed to diplomacy hereafter we shall see our diplomacy contributing to our literature, as has not infrequently already been the case.—Century.

The Roman Lupetto.

The Roman lupetto, which is almost indistinguishable from the so called Pomeranian dog, invariably tries to bury or cover over any food given him which he does not like. If fed on a loose drugget he will skillfully cover up the obnoxious food; if the carpet is nailed down so that he cannot do this he goes through the exact process with his nose which would turn over the plate if it were movable. The lupetto has a general contempt for any but meat diet, and, though he may condescend to accept bread and milk out of deference to his owner (many of them would not make this concession), he is sure to go through the form of protest first.

Birdskin Garments.

Eskimo women wear the most curious kind of underclothing, its peculiarity being that it is made of the skins of birds. These skins, before being sewed together, are chewed well by the women in order to make them soft. About a hundred skins are required to make a shirt, and the labor of chewing the skins which form their garments is quite enough to account for the massive, well developed jaws of Eskimo women.

THE HIDDEN DOOR

Sackett street woke up one Tuesday morning to find that the shutters had not been taken down from the windows of Burchard's shop. For thirty-two years old Burchard, as everybody called him, had opened his shop for business six days of the week at 7 o'clock in the morning. He had never taken a business day off or lost one through sickness.

The belief was when the shop was found closed that the old man had died in his bed, and about 8:30 o'clock the police came to pick the lock of the door and effect an entrance. All doors and windows were found securely fastened, and there were no tracks to be found in the shop of intruders. The officers fully expected to find the dead body of the old man in his bedroom, but much to their surprise no grewsome spectacle met their gaze. As a matter of fact, old Burchard could not be found about the place either living or dead.

After a thorough search it was reasoned that he had been called away on business and that the police had been overofficious. One of their number was therefore left to guard the shop until the proprietor should return and the excitement subsided.

Old Burchard did not return. After a week the case was taken up again, and parties were found who had seen him put up his shutters and lock his door at 9 o'clock Monday night. He had said nothing of going away, and he had left no message within the shop. All the watches and clocks belonging to his customers were there, as also about $3,000 worth of goods, and among his papers were two notes falling due on the day after his strange disappearance. He owed no man a dollar, and the idea that he had run away was absurd. The city was searched and the man advertised for, but the week went by and no clew was secured.

One of the strange features of the case was that no money could be found. The old man never did business with the banks, and no one had ever seen a safe in his shop. He handled thousands of dollars yearly, but where did he keep it? He often loaned money on diamonds and plate, but where he deposited them for safe keeping no one had ever learned. Unless he had gone away and taken his cash with him there ought to be a fortune hidden away in that old shop somewhere. People to the number of a dozen who had raised cash on personal property came forward to say so, but hunt as they did the searchers could find nothing outside the regular stock.

The next of kin was a brother, living a thousand miles away. He came on and renewed the search. When it panned out nothing he hired men to raze the building to the ground, and every brace and beam was tested as it was removed. The work went on until only the cellar walls were left, and stone masons tested these with their hammers and found no hollow spots. The bottom of the cellar was dug up to a depth of three feet, but no cavities or iron bound boxes were discovered. That ended the search, and then a detective was employed to take the case up as a whole.

He was a shrewd fellow, but what could he do? A man locks himself into his shop at night. He is missing next morning, with all the doors still locked and the keys on the inside. He owes no man a cent, but leaves thousands of dollars' worth of property behind him. Two hundred newspapers give the affair publicity, and a million people perhaps are on the watch for a man described so and so, but not the slightest trace can be discovered. What was there for a detective to work on?

Years went by and the cellar remained open. No one wanted to buy the site. In time the Burchard mystery ceased to be talked about, and a new generation of boys grew up to play hide and seek in the cellar. Ten years had gone by when three or four boys jumped into the cavity one day after a football which had been kicked there. In the struggle for the ball it was kicked here and there, and finally fell into a hole at the base of the crumbling west wall. In trying to recover it the boys pulled away a stone, and a minute later they had discovered a hidden door and solved the vexatious mystery.

Old Burchard had constructed a stone vault under the back yard, with an opening from the cellar. He was a cunning worker, and in making the door he had bolted thin slabs of stone to planks and hung the hinges on the inside. The keyhole looked like a fracture in one of the stones, and the whole was so artfully arranged that of the hundreds of men who had searched not one had suspected the location of the door. In their tests the stone masons probably missed that particular spot.

You are prepared to learn that old Burchard's bones were found within. The door had swung on him as he entered the vault to put away his money for the night and had become jammed. The foul air had killed him within an hour. In that vault were found upward of $80,000 in cash and all the property he had loans on, and of the body there were only bones and dust.

Of course everybody said that a secret door should have been suspected and looked for, just as if it hadn't been, and all the detectives remembered advising the heir to dig up the back yard to look for the vault. Nevertheless, three or four rollicking boys got $1,000 apiece for solving the mystery that puzzled thousands of older brains. M. QUAD.

HONEST ABE, U. S. M.

The Rural Mail Carrier Relates a Case of Poetry.

[Copyright, 1903, by C. B. Lewis.]

SEVERAL times of late when I have had mail for Uncle Joe White at the Red Bridge farm I noticed that he was looking worried and out of sorts, but I asked no questions and he volunteered no information until the other day. Then, as I drove up, he said to me:

"Abe, I'm in a heap of trouble over my son Dan, and I want your advice."

"And what's the matter with Dan?" I asked.

"Well, about four weeks ago he took to poetry, and he's been actin' like a 'tarnal fool ever since. I can't get one day's work a week out o' him. He's at that poetry from morning till night, and many a night he's up till midnight. He's got an idea that he's a new Tennyson and that he's going to become a great man. I've argued and coaxed and threatened, but it don't do no good.

"Here's some of the stuff he's written, and I want you to read it and tell me what you think."

The first poem handed up read as follows:

She's false to me, the girl I loved;
My happiness she's shattered;
My heart will never love again
Because my faith is scattered.

The second one read:

Talk not to me of life and love,
Talk not of roses red;
Talk not of buds and sunny skies,
But rather of the dead.

"Has he been in love and got the throw down?" I asked of Uncle Joe.

"Not as I know of. He just seemed to feel that way, you see. Here is one that is different."

The one that was different read:

"To arms! To arms!" Sir Henry cried.
"To arms, my brave defenders!"
And each one buckled on his sword
And tightened his suspenders.

Then to the fray Sir Henry rode
And to the fray was followed,
And every time he killed a man
Most gleefully he hollered.

"I don't know a durned thing about poetry," explained Uncle Joe, "but I do know when a feller is making a fool o' himself. That's what Dan is doing now, and I want to stop him. I'm not going to board and lodge and clothe him and let him sprawl around on the grass and tinker poetry. He was eating dinner the other day when he jumped up to write this down:

"The flowers of May are nothing to me,
And nought are the roses of June;
I would lay down and expire for the love of Mariah
And die in the full of the moon.

"Abe, is Dan a fool or a poet?" asked Uncle Joe as I finished reading the above.

"A little of both, I think," I replied.

"Will he ever git rich as a poet?"

"I hardly think so."

"Then, durn his hide, he's got to quit this nonsense and git into the cornfield. I want to do what's right by my children, Abe, but they've got to do what's right by me.

"Right now, when Dan ought to be hustling with a hoe, he's out under an apple tree writing poetry with his tongue hanging out and his eyes rolled up. If you say so I'll go out there and jump him two feet high and scare all the poetry out of him."

"I wouldn't be too sudden, Uncle Joe," I answered.

"How too sudden?"

"Well, I'd give him a little warning—a little poetic warning. After I'm gone you might wander out that way and carelessly say to Dan:

"A farmer named White he had a son,
And the son he was a great poet,
And verses wrote he of meadow and lea,
And fast was the pace he did go it."

"Yes, Abe, and what else?" asked Uncle Joe.

"Then you can sort o' walk around

THE POET AT WORK.

Dan as if you were looking for something in the grass and continue:

"The blossoms of May don't blossom for me;
Unheeded the song of the crow;
The old spotted cow is nought to me now
Because of my heart full of woe."

"That's it, Abe. I begin to see."

"Dan will probably stop writing poetry to look up at you, but don't give him any attention. Rest your hand on your heart and look up at the sky and repeat:

"Talk not to me of summer skies,
Talk not of winds a-blowing;
Talk not of plows and drags and sich
And crops that should be growing."

"Keep 'er up, Abe—keep 'er up. I'm catching on."

"Then you softly side step toward Dan and carelessly spit on your hands and repeat:

"'Arise, arise!' the father said.
'For glory doth await thee,
And if thou stayest here behind
Thy daddy he will skate thee!'"

NEW SHORT STORIES

Fired In the Air.

Apropos of Senator Foraker's recent statement that the president was "quick on the trigger, but not too quick," C. E. Stackhouse of Omaha tells an amusing story of the president's western trip, says the New York Tribune. The presidential train had pulled into Hastings, the end of a division, and, following his usual custom, Mr. Roosevelt sent for the fireman and engineer and, shaking hands with them, made a complimentary little speech on the skill with which they had handled his train, concluding with these words:

"You and I have a right to be on fraternal terms, for, you know, I am an honorary member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen."

The remark was received with dead silence, to the president's amazement, and the men departed without replying.

Turning to a railroad official, Mr. Roosevelt inquired why his little speech fell so flat and was told that at the time of the Burlington strike the engineers and firemen on that road severed all connection with the unions, and the men whom he had addressed were what his "brother firemen" would contemptuously term "scabs."

"That," says Mr. Stackhouse, "was a time when the president was too quick on the trigger."

The Doctor's Certificate.

Letters come by the thousand to the pension bureau and among them many strange ones. This is one received from a "doctur" in North Carolina in reference to an application for a pension:

A Helping Hand.

"Gracious!" exclaimed the stranger in the west. "What a cruel country this is!"

"How's that, stranger?" asked the tough citizen.

"Why, I just heard that a fellow was shot down here yesterday for lending a helping hand to a fellow mortal!"

"Lending a helping hand, did yeh say?" queried the cowboy. "Why, I remember the case."

"How was it?"

"Alkali Ike was a-playin' a poker game an' he slipped three aces t' his partner under th' table. Of course, somebody shot 'im f'r lendin' thet soht of a helpin' hand!"—Baltimore Herald.

The Canary's Claws.

If you have a canary or other cage bird look to its claws from time to time, for in a state of captivity the bird's nails grow so long that they need cutting. If this be neglected the bird is in danger of getting its nails caught in the edge and hanging there till it dies. Use a sharp pair of nail scissors and take care not to cut more than just the tips of the nails. If you hold the bird in a good light you will see a little red "thread" in each nail. This you must avoid or you will draw blood and hurt your little pet.

Inherited.

"And now," said Professor Longhunter as he greeted Henry Peck, "what shall we make of your little boy—a lecturer? He has a sincere taste for it."

"I know he has," replied the male parent. "He inherits it from his mother."—Schoolmaster.

How Trees Cool the Air.

We think of a tree as a cooling agent because its shade protects us from the heat of the sun, but it cools the air in another way that is not generally known; in fact, it cools the air around it as a lump of ice cools a vessel of water.

The tree has a body temperature of about 45 degrees, just as we have a body temperature of 98 degrees, which is not affected by outside influences. It is the tree's blood heat, so to speak. So that the air around it is cooled by the tree itself as well as by the shade it makes.

When a tree in full leaf is struck by a strong wind we wonder that it is not torn all to pieces. And so it would be but for the way the limbs and twigs are arranged by nature. That arrangement is such that the effect of the wind is broken, for the limbs sway and move in a hundred directions instead of one, and the force of the blast is so scattered that it is comparatively harmless.

If the limbs all moved at once in the same direction no tree could escape being torn apart.

Pleasure In the Heavens.

There is a satisfaction in learning the names and positions of the stars that does not belong to the study of the planets. The stars apparently never change so far as their position relative to each other is concerned. The planets are always moving, and to those who do not watch the heavens with particular attention it is a cause of surprise very often to find a "new star" adorning a certain section of the heavens. If, however, this newcomer be carefully observed from night to night, it will be found to change its distance from the fixed stars, and the observer will discover that it is a planet and at liberty to wander about from place to place under the sole condition that it obeys certain rules of motion. When the bright stars that grace the heavens become familiar to observers, they will know just what to expect on each succeeding season.

The Macgregors.

The history of the Macgregor race is one of persecution. In the early years of the seventeenth century every man's hand was raised against them, and they could be mutilated and slain with impunity. When, in a less barbarous age, they were invited to join the solemn league and covenant, they replied that "as they bore the crown on the point of their swords they would not fail to use the latter in defense of the former." The Macgregors were forbidden to use their family name by James VI. The proscription was removed by Charles II., only to be again inflicted in the reign of William and Mary. Indeed it was not till 1822 that a royal license to use the name was granted to Sir Charles Macgregor, until then known as "Murray."

A LOVE THAT NEVER DIED

(Original.)

When General Zachary Taylor's troops were in Mexico confronting those of Santa Anna an incident of secret service took place which was not only thrilling, but which contained a romance.

One evening two officers, one in the uniform of a Mexican colonel, the other that of a captain, rode into the advance Mexican camps and asked to be conducted to the tent of the commanding officer. Arriving there, they found Major Fourtado, to whom they presented an order purporting to be signed by General Santa Anna directing that they be afforded every facility to inspect the camps. This was given them. They rode over the ground, noted the approaches, and as they were about to depart they were arrested and taken to Major Fourtado, the commandant. On them were found sketches and memoranda that proved them to be spies. They confessed and were informed that they would be shot at daylight the next morning.

The men were Lieutenant Colonel Otis Winchester and Lieutenant Warren Holmes of the American army. Colonel Winchester, knowing that certain information was extremely necessary to his general, had volunteered to make a bold attempt to secure it. Lieutenant Holmes was sent with him, it being hoped that if Winchester was taken Holmes might get through and back with the information. The uniforms had been obtained from Mexican officers, prisoners of war. Santa Anna's signature had been forged from a dispatch which had been captured on the messenger who bore it.

Neither slept during the night and shortly before dawn wrote brief letters to their homes, which they were told would be forwarded under flag of truce to General Taylor. Winchester, much the older man, was composed, but Holmes suffered from all the depression to be expected in one about to be shot.

"Are you related," asked Winchester, "to Edward C. Holmes of the class of 182—, at West Point?"

"He was my father," replied Holmes.

Winchester said nothing, but looked at the young man with a melancholy stare. At the moment a messenger from Major Fourtado entered.

"The commandant," he said, "is especially reluctant to take the lives of two such brave men. He deems one sufficient to satisfy the military law common in such cases and directs me to inform you that you are permitted to draw lots, the one losing to be executed at once, the other to be exchanged."

Winchester again turned his glance on young Holmes, and a sigh—it might have been of relief—escaped him. The two officers exchanged letters to their respective families, to be taken north by the one escaping death. Then they were conducted to Fourtado's headquarters.

The commandant placed two stones in his hat, the one black, the other white. Colonel Winchester claimed by right of seniority to draw, the first stone drawn being decisive. He stepped up to Fourtado, who sat at a table holding the hat, put in his hand and, withdrawing it tossed a black stone on the table.

"You have lost," said the major, laying down the hat. Then, turning to the guard, he directed that the prisoners be taken away. A few minutes later a volley was heard without, and Otis Winchester had been executed.

Major Fourtado took up his hat and before placing it on his head put in his hand to withdraw the remaining stone. It was not there.

"Has any one touched the hat," he asked, surprised, "since I laid it on the table?"

Every one present disclaimed having done so.

"Gentlemen," said the major, "we have shot a noble man. He took both chances, sparing his companion."

A month later Lieutenant Holmes was exchanged. Before taking his departure for the American lines he was conducted to Major Fourtado's headquarters.

"What bond was there between you and your comrade?" asked Fourtado.

"None that I know of. General Taylor called for volunteers to attend an officer on a hazardous enterprise. I volunteered and was accepted."

"Lieutenant, I will tell you a secret. When Colonel Winchester withdrew his hand from the hat that decided your fate and his he took both stones."

The information weighed heavily upon Holmes. He remembered Winchester's mention of his father, who had died some years before, and as soon as he returned to his home went straight to his mother to ask her to enlighten him.

"Mother," he asked, "who was Otis Winchester?"

"Why do you ask, my boy?" replied the lady, starting.

The young man gave his mother the information he had received from the Mexican. It was some time before she could find her voice to speak. Then she said:

"Otis Winchester was your father's rival. They were classmates at West Point and I was a guest of the superintendent. I decided for your father."

The last five words were spoken almost in a whisper, after which there was a silence between the two, a silence which it would have been profane to interrupt and the impressiveness of which no word could depict. Then the son went to his mother and put his arms about her.

"I supposed," he said, "that this the greatest of all sacrifices was for me, and I could not understand how it could be so. I see now that it was for you."

FUNERALS IN GREECE.

They Are Somewhat of a Shock to the American Tourist.

"One thing sure to shock the American tourist is a Greek funeral," said a recently returned traveler. "It is a spectacle which most persons of conservation governed decency desire to avoid, because the body of the dead is exposed in an open hearse. The coffin is shallow, so that not only the face and head, but the hands and much of the body, can be seen from the sidewalk as the procession moves through the streets.

"The lid of the coffin, frequently richly upholstered and decorated with garlands and wreaths, is carried on the hearse by the undertaker. The priest, the relatives and other mourners follow, and as the ghastly spectacle moves along it is customary for bystanders to remove their head gear and cross themselves.

"In the Athens cemeteries graves are rented for a term of years, just like the habitations of the quick. Only the wealthy own burial lots. This is invariably an evidence of wealth or aristocracy. The poor seldom dream of buying a lot or tomb. Such purchase would be deemed among them an unnecessary luxury.

"At the end of the term for which a grave is rented the bones are dug up, placed in a bag, labeled with the name and date and deposited in a general receptacle."—New York Herald.

Rewards For Lost Property.

"More lost and stolen articles would be recovered if the losers would adopt different methods in advertising for their property," said a headquarters detective the other day. "Of course honest persons do not haggle over the remuneration for returning a locket, a dog or anything else. But every one is not built along those lines. It may sound very nice to say, 'Liberal reward if returned to owner,' but there are different ideas of liberality. The sum usually dwindles in the mind of the owner when he sees his property before him, and no one knows this better than the finder.

"It is far more effective to set forth a definite sum in the advertisement. Five or twenty-five dollars means more than a vague promise to be real generous. Of course there are cases when it is not wise to be too explicit, but in nine cases out of ten a stated sum will bring better results than an indefinite offer. This is nearly always true with watches with the owner's monogram engraved on the case, as the pawnbroker refuses to loan so much on articles so easily identified."—New York Press.

Read Less, Think More.

Mere reading is a waste of time. To conduce to intelligence the reader must train the mind to concentration on the subject in hand, and to concentration must be added the effort to clothe and transmit thought in appropriate phrase.

The Sailors' Psalm.

How many people—landsmen, at all events—are aware that one of the Psalms is often called the sailors' psalm? It is of course Psalm cvii, wherein occur the beautiful and familiar words, "They that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters—these see the works of the Lord and his wonders in the deep." The psalm is usually read as part of the simple services which take place on Sundays on ships at sea. For that reason it is known as the sailors' psalm.—London Chronicle.

The Road to Success.

It is well for the young man to remember that if he finishes his education as a skilled farmer or stockman or fruit grower there are plenty of places open waiting for him at good pay, while if he becomes a minister, lawyer or doctor he may have to hunt long and far to find a place and wait long before a good living is assured.—Rockford Register.

As It Was Printed.

There is one woman poet in New York who will read proof carefully until the edge of a recent error wears off. She spent two days on a touching poem, the pivotal line of which read:

My soul is a lighthouse keeper.

When the printer finished with it the line read:

My soul is a light housekeeper.

Not Encouraging.

"Do you know," remarked the pessimist, "I think I have experienced every kind of hard luck on the list except hanging."

"Well, you shouldn't be discouraged," remarked the optimist. "Remember the old adage, 'While there is life there is hope.'"—Cincinnati Enquirer.

There is no man so friendless but what he can find a friend sincere enough to tell him disagreeable truths.—Bulwer Lytton.

The Same old Song.

DePere Democrat:—After a country newspaper man has hollowed himself hoarse in efforts to persuade people to patronize home merchants, and accidentally stumbles onto the fact that some of the fellows whose interests he is endeavoring to protect are sending away for their job printing, it rather shakes his faith in mankind and makes reciprocity look like a penny with a hole in it.

This short paragraph from the Depere Democrat contains a world of truth. No doubt many a newspaper man has gone thru the experience of listening to the complaints of merchants about people sending out of town for goods, and then after he has hied himself to his office and written out a roast for the fellow that traded out of town, he receives a bill from the merchant made out on stationery that was printed by some cheap printing concern out of town.

Yes, it shakes the faith of the editor in mankind, but does it alter the facts? All editors know that it is the man who does the most whining and the least advertising that is the quickest to break a rule that he wants others to observe.

There are cases where the merchant himself is to blame for people going out of town for their goods. They have asked the merchant to order something for them, which the merchant claimed to do, but the length of time necessary to secure the article convinced the purchaser that it was not ordered for months, and in some instances not at all.

The old story of trading at home has been told and retold by every paper in the country many times, until it should be familiar to all, and barrels of ink have been used in telling how the town can be benefitted thereby, and while every man and woman who reads the articles may not believe in them the way the editor does, it does not alter the fact that it is good advice just the same, and may make some converts to a good course.

The Tribune tries to follow the golden rule, "Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you," and the mere fact that our neighbor does not follow the same rule does not swerve us in our purpose. Had we stored up and remembered all the mean things that have occurred during a twenty years experience in the newspaper business, and attempted to return a blow for every one we have received, it is entirely probable that life would have long ago become a burden.

So, in following this rule, we continue to tell the people to patronize the home merchant. He may get his printing outside, but patronize him anyway. The merchant who goes out of town for his printing is in the same boat with his customer who sends out of town. He's bound to get skinned in the end; in fact many of them get skinned every time only they don't known it, but when they do find it out, they will reform, not on account of sentiment, but because it is business.

Want a New Bridge.

People about the city are now loud in their condemnation of the fact that the bridge is being rebuilt instead of a new one being put in. The reason for this is that the travel on the bridge is so extensive and the old structure is so narrow that at times it can hardly accommodate the teams that cross.

Many of the people in their condemnation have a tendency to blame it all onto the city fathers, saying that they could as well have expended thirty thousand dollars and had a new bridge as to have wound up with the same old structure made of different materials. This is not true, for the city is now carrying all the debt she can legally stagger under, the public improvements of the past few years having been something enormous considering the population and wealth of the city.

Everybody would like to see a new bridge, one that we could hold horse races on if necessary, but everything cannot be done at once, and this is one of the improvements that will have to bide its time.

It has been suggested, and probably with reason, that an ordinance be passed by the city council making it a misdemeanor to leave a horse or team standing on the street untied. Hardly a day passes that there is not a runaway or two in the city and as most of them head for the bridge it is a miracle that nothing more serious has occurred. Tie your horses and protect your own property as well as others.

A story is going the rounds which is in effect that the Empress of Corea is a Wisconsin Woman, and several papers have taken the trouble to deny the tale, stating that there is not an atom of truth in it. As Corea is but little larger than a good-sized Wisconsin farm, we cannot see that it would be anything strange to find a Wisconsin woman running the whole outfit.

Mill Dam at Necedah Goes Out.

Necedah Republican: The mill dam across the Yellow river in this village went out a little after five o'clock last Saturday afternoon. The break came near the east end, and two piers and the dam for one third of its lenght was wrecked.

The critical moment was announced by loud noises caused by the creaking and snapping of the huge timber as the structure gave way before the wall of imprisoned water, and the water filling the reservoir extenting for miles up river, thus liberated became an angry flood that raged through the wrecked dam in a mighty torrent into the river below. In the course of a few hours the mill-pound was entirely drained of water, except for a little rivulet around its edges that once served as the channel of the stream, or a few deep holes here and there over its surface. It was an unusual sight that met the eyes of Necedah people last Sunday as they looked out over where usually is a nice body of water, and found a dark, dreary, sunken waste, covered with mud, slime, bark and drift wood, with an immense growth of moss, weeds and reeds laid flat, and the monotony relieved occasionally by a stump or half-buried saw log.

This old mill dam is one of the land marks of our village. It was built forty-nine years ago and is about two hundred feet in lenght. Some years ago there was a washout near where the present break occurred. Last season considerable time and money was spent in repairs and much leakage was stopped. This spring a portion of the apron on the east side was carried away by the high water. The undertow of water pouring over the dam at this point to undermine the foundation and no doubt contributed its share in producing Saturday's disaster. Just above the dam at this point is an old pier, and water falling from this strikes the breast of the dam and this is cited as another cause of the mischief.

The wrecking of the dam falls as a serious blow and set back to the Necedah Flour Mill Company. The company holds the water power on a ninty-nine year lease and are required to keep the dam in good repair. Since the repairs were made last summer the power has proved more efficient and nearly adequate to the company's needs, as since then both mill and electric light plant have been operated by water power, with exception of about three weeks. While it has not been definitely settled, it is quite probable that the dam will be rebuilt in a substantial way.

As it has become necessary to use steam power for the lighting plant, the flour mills will be operated nights also.

Jacobson Brothers of this city expect to furnish plans for the reconstruction of the dam in the near future. They have been on the ground and looked over the premises with a view to starting the work.

A six-year-old heard that a baby had arrived next door. He visited the house shortly after to investigate matters.

"I understand that you have a baby here" voluntered Young Amercia strutting up to the father boldly.

"Yes, Willie, she came from a big store in Bangor, and we are all very happy."

"Say, tell us, mister, how many yellow trading stamps did yer get?" queried Willie, earnestly.—Ex.

Public Auction.

The board of education of the city of Grand Rapids will sell at public auction on Thursday, August 6, at nine o'clock a. m., in front of the court house, to the highest bidder for cash, all of the buildings on the two lots recently owned by the Frank Howe estate in the first ward. This will include besides the house, the rock in the foundation walls and the front and west side fences. The board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

By order of, SCHOOL BOARD.

Network Girl.

She wears a net work waist,
Her stockings are network, too;
I look at her openwork sleeves and see
Her soft arms gleaming through.
When she raises her fluffy skirts
A litte way, ah, me!
I see the dainty bits of white
That peep through the filligree.

You say it is rude of me
To look through her network waist,
Or to gaze below when she lifts her skirts,
So dainty and eke so chaste?
Nay, say not so! It were rude
If I should neglect to see,
For why is she wearing her network things
If not to be seen by me?

No False Claims.

The proprietors of Foley's Honey and Tar do not advertise this as a "sure cure for consuption." They do not claim it will cure this dread complaint in advanced cases, but do positively assert that it will cure in the earlier stages and never fails to give comfort and relief in the worst cases. Foley's Honey and Tar is without doubt the greatest throat and lung remedy. Refuse substitutes. For sale by Johnson & Hill Co.

BRIEF CITY ITEMS

Some Mild Weather.—Last Saturday was one of the most oppressive days we have had in this locality for some time, and many thought that it was the warmest day we had had so far this summer. This was not the case however. At the Court house that day mercury stood at 86 when the highest point was reached, while on the 7th and 8th of July it registered 88½. This is fairly warm weather for this section, but of course does not compare with what has been happening futher south.

Enlarging School Grounds.—The school board has purchased two lots from the Howe estate which will be used to enlarge the school grounds of the east side Ward school. The lots were sold at public auction and brought $1135. They make an addition of land 132 x 102 feet, and it is the intention of the board to enlarge the grounds still farther. The buildings on the property will be sold at auction.

The Eagles Dance.—The Fraternal Order of Eagles gave a dance at their hall on Tuesday evening, which was a very pleasant affair from a social viewpoint. A number of electric fans have been placed in the hall which proved a very nice thing on a warm night. The Big Four furnished the music, which was all that could be desired.

Got More Workmen.—About thirty Austrians arrived in the city last week and have been put to work by the Consolidated Water Power company on the dam. The company was unable to secure enough men to do the common labor so as to carry the work forward as rapidly as they wanted, hence the importation of outside labor.

Purchased Some Land.—L. M. Nash has purchased from Herman R. Behrend of Minneapolis a track of five acres of land on the river bank just opposite the Wickham addition. The place is favorably situated and will undoubtedly prove a good investment.

Struck by Lightning.—Lightning damaged the steeple of the Catholic church on Tuesday afternoon during the rain and electric storm. Some of the siding was torn off, but the cost of repairs will be only nominal.

Lost the Canvas.—Some person or persons stole about 25 yards of canvas belonging to Bossert Bros. on Sunday night. The canvas had been used to cover a new cement walk that the firm was building in front of Geo E. Hoskinson's place.

Meat Market Change.—Owen Love and James McCarthy have bought out the interest of A. F. Stanke of the firm of Stanke & Reiland, and the firm will be known as Jas. McCarthy & Co. They will operate a market on each side of the river.

Entertained His Friends.—Guy Wood entertained a party of friends at his home on Monday evening. There was dancing and other amusements, and a very pleasant evening was spent by the young people.

Public Stenographer.—Miss May Dumas has opened an office in the Mackinnon block for the purpose of doing stenographic and typewriter work for the public in general.

Professor H. W. Prentis tells a joke on himself with much enjoyment. One day during an examination, when he was visiting the various room, he stopped to ask a very bright boy a sum in algebra, and although the problem was comparatively easy, he could not answer it. Professor Prentis remarked with some show of severity:

"My boy, you ought to be able to do that. At your age George Washington was a surveyor."

The boy looked him str ight in the eye and answered;

"Yes, sir; and at your age he was President of the United States."

The conversation dropped at that point.—Ex.

"While my business has been steadily increasing for years," remarked a druggist, "I find I don't sell as much hair restorer as I used to."

"Perhaps people are not so credulous in these days," suggested his friend. "Besides, after trying many of the preparations in vain a man would naturally stop buying them."

"No," continued the druggist, "I don't think those are the reasons. Human nature is as credulous as ever, and the ranks of the baldheads are being constantly recruited. I guess I must look for the reason nearer home. Twenty years ago I wasn't bald myself."—Philadelphia Ledger.

AT THE GUARD-HOUSE

A Barrack Room Love Story...

Copyright, 1895, by American Press Association

By P. Y. BLACK

The angry woman charged upon him. Herman grabbed an apple, upset the barrel and fled, screeching.

"Did ye ever hear the like," Mrs. Malone muttered—"Katy to go an' see Faval? Was iver the like?"

She did not know.

The guardhouse lay at the back of the post on the bluff overlooking the meadow. The inner room was very full as a result of pay day. The sloping wooden platform on which the prisoners, wrapped in their blankets, slept was lined with recumbent figures. Some of the long sentence men, however, for greater comfort had made hammocks of their blankets and slung them by cords from hooks in the walls. The barred windows were few, and by one of these, in a corner, Faval had slung his hammock beneath another man, who swung near the roof. Thus the window, open for the heat, was almost shut off from sight of the rest of the occupants and the wicket which separated the guard from the prisoners. An Indian scout had been brought in from the camp, a wild and savage sight. He lay outstretched on his back on the floor, howling lugubriously and beating on the boards with extended fists. In his drunken muddle headedness he had an idea that the white men were about to hang him, and his howls sank to a long, horrible, wailing death song.

Amid the noise and the heat and the stench of the overcrowded room Faval was wide awake. For half an hour after taps so he remained, until the lamp at the door was removed. Soon as the post, recovered from its periodical outburst of pay day riot, resumed its regular nightly air of repose, the lonely sentries began their monotonous calls. Faval's window opened on the back of the guardhouse, and he could not see the sentry on No. 1, but very distinctly there came to his ears the methodical beat of the soldier's shoes on the porch and at last his first proclamation to his brother sentries of the hour.

"Easily!" he muttered and then huddled in his hammock.

"Ten o'clock," Faval murmured. "Two hours yet. It is a year!"

As the distant calls came faintly from the faraway posts and No. 1 repeated "All's well!" the young musician stealthily reached from his hammock and grasped one of the window bars. It shook beneath the pressure of his slender fingers. "Easily!" he muttered and then huddled in his hammock as he heard the sentry challenge and quickly shout to the sergeant inside:

"Officer of the day, turn out the guard!"

Had they suspected? Had they discovered?

"Never mind the guard!"

The trembling lad heard the officer step on the porch and the sergeant make his report. Faval sweated with fear. What was it? Were they talking about him? Would the sergeant, would Holmes, betray him and have him put in irons? It was likely. He had done as Katy had told him to do, but he could not understand when she had said that Holmes was his friend. The officer went away, and, trembling, Faval crept from his hammock and slipped on shoes and clothes and stayed at the bars, peering out anxiously.

"He won't be back until early morning," the corporal of the guard remarked, with a yawn. "Daddy Dodds is getting old and likes his snooze even when he's officer of the day. Where are you off to, Holmes?"

The sergeant in charge replied gruffly, as was his wont.

"There were so many prisoners coming in I had no time to get my blankets. Take the keys till I come back."

He went out, but he did not go to the barracks for his blankets. It was dark and moonless now, and at the foot of the bluff he met the girl. She was very pale, but in her there was no sign of fear. Her eyes glittered with determination. He tried to take her hand, but she withdrew it and whispered:

"Not yet—not until it is done. Is he ready?"

"He ought to be ready. I have done all I can," he answered, a little sullenly. "At midnight I shall engage No. 1's attention."

She gave a little laugh of triumph.

"I must see him," she said. "I must say goodby. I know the window."

He flashed up at that with suspicious anger.

"What do you want to see him for?" he whispered sullenly. "You told me to save him, and I have, but—but you are mine now. I don't want you to see him."

She laughed and put her hand in his.

"I know, Holmes," she said, "you are true and—and I love you better than I ever did, but"—

He interrupted her by passionately kissing her hand, and, stooping, he could not note her frown.

"But that poor boy! He loved me, too, and—and let me say goodby!"

He let her go, and she slipped up the bluff and so to the barred window. At once Faval's hand caught hers.

"The bar?" she whispered. "It is loose. The horses are at the cottonwood clump on the river. Noel, Noel, be careful!"

"My darling, I shall be there—or shot."

She was back with Holmes immediately, and, though her eyes sparkled, she wiped them with her handkerchief.

"Poor fellow!" she said and paused and then went on: "And so he is gone forever. Thank you, sergeant. I—I do like you now."

Holmes took her in his arms and kissed her.

"God bless you, Katy," he said, filled with love, "and may he forget me if I do not make you happy all your life!"

He left her, dazed at that caress, and went back to his duty, and the girl looked after him with a smile and a sigh.

The night passed on, punctuated by the yawning sentries' calls. The men marveled at their sergeant's unaccustomed cheerfulness. He chatted with them and laughed. They remembered afterward that for once they had heard Holmes laugh. He did not lie down. At 12 the sentry called the hour, and Holmes shortly afterward left him, saying he would patrol round the guardhouse. At Faval's window he stopped. No noise came from within save that of the prisoners' snores. He peered inside and made out that Faval's hammock was empty. One bar hung loose from its fastening at the top. The sergeant put it in place softly.

"He is gone!" he thought. "Out of the way—out of the way—out of the way, and she is promised to me!"

The relief went out at 1 o'clock, and soon the tired sentries relieved came tramping in with the corporal. Holmes was lying on his bunk in the office, but not asleep. Sleep was far from his glad eyes. He heard the sentries gossip as they prepared to lie down.

"Any of the officers giving a party tonight?"

"Don't know. Why?"

"'Cause a man and a woman galloped past on the river trail. I could just see them from No. 6. They were going B—Bar ranch way, and I thought they'd maybe been visiting in officers' row."

Holmes raised his head—a man? That was all right. A woman? Who could they be? He sat up on the edge of his cot. A terrible thought filled his mind. It could not be. Yet, yet—dared she play that trick? For a minute he sat still, and then without a word of excuse he left the guardhouse. He went straight to Mother Malone's. The angry woman was still sitting there, awaiting her husband and daughter.

"Where is Katy?" the sergeant asked, and his face was so white that the scars stood out upon his brow and cheeks in scarlet.

"Where, indeed?" cried Mrs. Malone. "The baggage! She's not been in tonight! She'll leave my house! Holmes, Holmes! What is it? What has she done now?"

With a loud curse the sergeant turned on his heel and rushed off. He made for the stables of his troop and roused the stable sergeant by furious blows on the gate.

"My horse, by order of the officer of the day!" he hoarsely yelled. "A prisoner has escaped!"

If he had been capable of thought, capable of planning a sure revenge, he would first have roused the guard and sent half a troop after the fugitives. Perhaps indeed he did think, but felt that this was a matter which concerned him alone. Therefore he went swiftly at a gallop in pursuit, and the sleepy stable sergeant went back to bed, and the guard remained on watch, wondering where their sergeant had gone, but all unaware of the prisoner's escape.

The river road? He spurred his horse down the trail furiously until the post was far behind him. On his right the river flowed; on his left the land rose in rippling bluffs, a gray black mass in the starlight. In front of him he knew the long and lonely trail stretched drearily without house, without town, for a hundred miles and at last ended at the railway. He was able, with an effort, to consider that the two would spare their horses, knowing how far they had to go and hardly expecting pursuit before guard mount in the morning, when the officer

Treat Your Kidneys for Rheumatism.

When you are suffering from rheumatism, the kidneys must be attended to at once so that they will eliminate the uric acid from the blood. Foley's Kidney Cure is the most effective remedy for this purpose. R. T. Hopkins of Polar, Wis., says: "After unsuccessfully doctoring three years for rheumatism with the best doctors, I tried Foley's Kidney Cure and it cured me. I cannot speak too highly of this great medicine." Sold by Johnson & Hill Co.

My Dear Wills—I send you inclosed (and registered—for I should go distracted if it was lost) my first number. Please let me have duplicate proofs as soon as possible, for I want to see something in connection with the story which is not a mass of confusion. It is an awfully long number—between eight and nine pages; but I must stagger the public into attention, if possible, at the outset. They shan't drop a number when I begin if I can help it.

I have hit on a new title in the course of a night walk to the North Foreland, which seems to me weird and striking—"The Woman in White."

My love to Dickens. How does he do? When will he write? Have you a house to let? I am at mortal enmity with my London landlord and am resolved to leave him. Where I am to go next "God, he knows." Ta-ta.

A Dangerous Innovation.

Deacon Carter could remember the days when the minister lined out the hymn and the congregation sang it. Although he had long been too feeble to go to church, his opinions still found their way to the people.

"We shall have some good organ playing this summer," an unwary visitor remarked to the deacon's daughter in the old man's hearing. "That teacher from Boston is going to play every Sunday while Annie Trumbull is off taking a vacation."

The deacon raised his stick and his quavering voice at the same time.

"You send for the minister to come here and see me, Daughter Mary," he said as clearly as he could. "I won't have such goings on! A musician playing on that organ! Let 'em go without till Annie Trumbull gets home again."

Warning.

If you have kidney or bladder trouble and do not use Foley's Kidney Cure, you will have only yourself to blame for results, as it positively cures all forms of kidney and bladder diseases.

Brutally Tortured.

A case came to light that for persistent and unmerciful torture has perhaps never been equalled. Joe Golobick of Colusa, Calif, writes, "For 15 years I endured insufferable pain from Rheumatism and nothing relieved me though I tried everything known. I came across Electric Bitters and it's the greatest medicine on earth for that trouble. A few bottles of it completely relieved and cured me." Just as good for Liver and Kidney troubles and general debility. Only 50c. Satisfaction guaranteed by John E. Daly, druggist.

CARE OF MIRRORS.

How to Clean and Keep Them In Good Condition.

In the first place, it is well to know a good cleaner. This can be made by adding to whiting enough cold tea to make a thin paste. Remove the fly specks with warm tea and dry the mirror. Then smear some of the paste on the glass and rub with a dry cloth.

A good way to polish the mirror is with a soft cloth and a few drops of aqua ammonia, says the Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph. Cleaning with paper is not effectual unless the best quality of rag paper is used.

To scour mirrors make a paste of whiting and water. Smear the surface with it and let it dry on the glass. Then rub it off with tissue paper or with a soft newspaper. Rub gently, for the particles of grit in the paper may scratch the glass.

The following is a good way to fill in the scratches that often appear on the backs of mirrors: Scratch away the mercury for about a quarter of an inch around the scratch and wet the place with a clean rag dipped in alcohol. Take a broken piece of mirror and mark out a piece of silvering larger than the place on the mirror. Place a small drop of mercury on the center of this silvering, allowing it to remain a few minutes. Clean away the silver from around the patch and slip it from the broken glass to the place to be mended, pressing it into place with a small piece of cotton batting.

How to Press Sleeves.

In pressing sleeves, which is the bane of the amateur's life, keep a wooden rolling pin for that purpose alone. Insert in the sleeve, and the pressing of seams and wrists also is as easily done as though it were a flat surface. Cover pin with flannel. Keep a heavy piece of flannel to lay over the ironing board when pressing wool goods. This prevents the shiny spots so objectionable in a finished garment.

How to Pack a Trunk.

The secret of good packing is firmness and smoothness, and to attain these everything should be put in the trunk in layers. Before putting in the dresses have a firm layer of undergarments and then proceed with the thickest and heaviest of your skirts. The skirts should be folded as nearly as possible in the folds they take in wear. See that you lay the skirts alternately in different directions, so that if the waistband on one is to the left side of the trunk the waistband of the next is at the right side, for thus the level will be preserved. Between light and dark dresses place a towel to prevent the former soiling the latter. Fold bodices as far as can be in the lines which they take upon the figure. Put stiff, lightly crushed paper into the sleeves and also into bows and puffings to prevent their being creased and then pack as tightly as convenient. When taken out of the trunk they will be found undjured.

How to Keep Milk Sweet.

A tiny pinch of carbonate of soda or salt put into the milk as soon as it arrives will help to prevent it from turning sour, and if it seems inclined to turn and is slowly heated to nearly boiling point and a pinch of carbonate of soda then stirred in the sourness will disappear. Some people also add a tiny pinch of sugar.

How to Fill Your Pipe.

Worshipers at the shrine of My Lady Nicotine will be interested in a correspondent's method of filling a pipe, a method from which he has obtained results greatly superior to those yielded by the old style. He places a wooden match down the center of the bowl, its lower end entering or covering the hole that leads to the stem, and, holding it in position with one finger, presses the tobacco firmly all round with the unsharpened end of a pencil. The match is then withdrawn, the pipe lighted up and the full flavor of the tobacco extracted without waste.

RUDOLPH.

On Wednesday, July 22nd at St. Killian's Church, Milladore, occurred the marriage of Emory Provest of Rudolph and Miss Kathryn Ashbeck of Milladore. They were attended by Miss Laura Provest and Will Hamm. The nuptial ceremony was solemnized by Rev. Father Gara of Junction City. The wedding festivities were quiet in their simple elegance only immediate relatives and intimate friends participating. A sumptuous dinner was served at the bride's home after which the bridal party repaired to the home of the groom for supper. Mr. and Mrs. Provest will reside in Rudolph, where they will be "at home" to their friends after Aug. 1st. Congratulations.

Once more, for the benefit of those who continually attempt to have anonymous items published in a newspaper, we will state that if you want your news published in the Tribune you must have your name signed at the bottom. We do not want to publish your name, but we do want to know who the items are from. Every week communications come to the office with the request that they be published but the writer forgets to sign hisname and the items are left out. Write anything you want and send it to the office with your name at the bottom and we will give it careful consideration and if it is considered to be legitimate news it will be published. Please remember, however, that the anonomous letter does not go.

GRACE BEFORE MEAT.

Devotions of a Scotch Farmer Who Thought Well of Himself.

An old Ayrshire farmer used regularly to deliver himself of the following quaint effusion as a grace before meat:

"Tak' aff yer bonnets, honest men! Are they a' aff? Oh, Lord, weed out a' the papists out o' the land—pluck them oot as we do the thistle frae out o' the grund. Pour doon a shoover o' whittles upo' a' the loons that wear the lawn sleeves, for they eat up the fat an' the lean o' the land an' winna let a puir body like me gang his ain way. Dig a muckle dike atween us an' hell, but a far muckler ane atween us an' the wild Irish. Oh, grant that the gray mare brakna the tether nor the wind blaw doon the haystacks. Grant that we may keep the broom coo, the crummie coo an' Rowtie, an', oh, preserve us frae witches an' warlocks an' beasts wi' kaug nebs that gang in amang the heather. Grant a' gude things an' gude hairsts to a' honest fowk an' a' men present an' I, my ainsel', wha am as muckle as one sax o' them. Shoover doon a blessing on a' honest men that wear blue bonnets, sic like as Abraham, Isaac an' Jacob were in the holy land o' Canaan. Gi'e to oorsels an' to a' the freen's o' Scotland weal an' fortitude till endure a' the ills an' uncos o' this life, an' as what we've gotten is a our ain it's nuebody's business. Grant a blessing on the present favor. Amen!" —Scottish American.

Fiction in History.

Thomas Carlyle in his history of the French revolution gives a description of a naval battle June 1, 1794, off Brest between Villaret-Joyeuse, in command of the French fleet, and Admiral Howe, in which he vividly depicted the sinking of the Vengeur.

These are the concluding sentences: "Lo, all flags, streamers, jacks, every rag of tricolor that will yet run on rope flies rustling aloft; the whole crew crowds to the upper deck, and with universal, soul maddening yell shouts, 'Vive la republique!' sinking, sinking. She staggers, she lurches, her last drunk whirl. Ocean yawns abysmal; down rushes the Vengeur, carrying 'Vive la republique!' along with her, unconquerable, into eternity."

Rear Admiral Griffiths, at the time a lieutenant on board the Culloden, wrote to a newspaper to show that Carlyle's account had no foundation in fact. After investigation Carlyle admitted that not a word of this thrilling story was true except that the Vengeur sank.

LOST HIS LIFE IN THE RIVER.

FRED GILLMAN OF PLOVER DOWNS WHILE SWIMMING.

A Companion Attempts to save his life but Fails.—Drowned Man was able to Swim but a little.—Had been Working on the Dam.

Fred G. Gillman, who had been working on the dam for the Consolidated Water power Company, was drowned on Thursday evening while in swimming with two companions.

The deceased was about 24 years of age and came here from Plover, being a son of Mr. and Mrs. George Gillman of that place. The father of the young man came here the next morning after the accident and left the same day for home with the remains.

Two companions were swimming with young Gillman. One of these could not swim, and the other, who was a fairly good swimmer, made a heroic effort to save the drowning man, but was unable to do so on account of the fact that the young fellow was a very poor swimmer himself and instead of aiding his would-be rescuer, fought against his attempts to help him.

The morning after the drowning a coroners jury was impanelled by Justice Cooper which viewed the remains and listened to the testimony of all the persons who had been present at the time, and they rendered a verdict of accidental drowning.

G. A. Bozlee of Stevens Point was one of the men who was with Gillman at the time of the accident and he testified that the three had gone down to swim about eight o'clock, and after being in the water about 15 minutes he had started to go out. As he started to wade from the river he turned about and saw Gillman sink beneath the water, then come to the surface and paddle about rather weekly. He surmised that the young fellow was beyond his depth, and as he was going from the shore instead of coming toward it, he called to him to attract his attention and get him to steer for shore.

Gillman paid no attention to the calls and continued to struggle and Bozlee swam out to him and caught him by the hand. He made an effort to drag him to shore, but found that he could not swim to advantage with one hand, so pulled himself loose and allowed the drowning man to catch hold of his foot. After a brief struggle in this manner Bozlee was pulled beneath the water, and he decided that he had better save himself before they were both drowned and jerking away, swam to the shore. Gillman continued to struggle for few minutes, drifting further from shore all the time, and at last, with one despairing cry, sank beneath the water to rise no more.

Bozlee testified that there were numerous other swimmers just across the river from where they were bathing, but that they made no effort to help him, even tho he called to them repeatedly.

George Gage of Packwaukee, who also works on the dam, and was the third party in swimming, testified to about the same facts as had been told by Bozlee, but was unable to assist in the rescue for the reason that he could not swim a stroke and dared not go beyond his depth. The consequence was that he stood in the water about fifteen feet from the drowning man and could do nothing to save him.

George Kellner was also swimming near the scene of the accident, being further up the river, and when he heard the call for help, he disrobed again and swam to the place where Gillman had been struggling but a moment before, but was unable to do anything as the young man has disappeared from sight.

The body was soon recovered by Peter Diedrich and some workmen, who constructed a raft and went to the scene of the accident. The body lay in about ten or twelve feet of water. In the meantime Dr. Boorman had been called, and tho he made every possible effort to resuscitate the drowned man, life was extinct and nothing could be done. So near as could be told the body had lain in the water about forty minutes before it was recovered.

It was certainly a sad accident, and seemingly entirely unnecessary, as there is no current where it occurred, being below the cofferdam and just above the grist mill.

Chicago will Celebrate.

Chicago's Centennial Jubilee, to be given this fall, is beginning to attract attention throughout the Western States. From September 26 to Oct. 1, the city will be the scene of a series of municipal fetes such as have been equaled only in the days of the Romans

Two of the most popular features on the program will be the military parade for President Roosevelt, and a vivid reproduction of the burning of Chicago.

The parade will include United States troops from the forts of the West, the state militia, crack regiments from different parts of the country, and other uniformed organizations.

In the mimic conflagration, five hundred tons of Roman fire will be ignited simultaneously on the tops of the taller buildings within the area burned by the great fire of 1871. The skyscrapers will be especial vantage grounds for the display, and from the DeKoven street home of the famous Mrs. O'Leary, where the great fire started, there will be a big flight of bombs.

In one of the parks there will be a reproduction of Fort Dearborn, build in 1803. This was the first white man's building in the city, and it is to commemorate its construction that the Jubilee is held. Four hundred Indians, descendants of the tribes that once lived in Chicago, will hold camp about the fort and will make a daily attack on it. The structure also will be the scene of a reunion of the scattered pioneers of the city.

An industrial parade at night, brilliantly illuminated and containing many handsome floats, will be another spectacle. There also will be superb fireworks, automobile races, swimming races and water polo contests in which the participants will be the famous athletes of the country, yachting races in which the crack boats of the lakes will fight for valuable cups, and many other open-air events to which all Chicago and the surrounding country will be bidden.

The Mayor's Committee, having the Jubilee in charge, will raise more than $100,000. The railroads have pledged favorable rates, and the promise is made that Chicago will have more than five hundred thousand visitors.

Information regarding the Centennial can be secured from C. R. Macloon, Sec'y Great Northern hotel.

Carlson-Derricks.

Hans Carlson and Miss Emma Derricks were united in the holy bonds of matrimony on Thursday afternoon at the Catholic parsonage, Rev. F. VanRoasmalen officiating. They were accompanied by John Fitzgerald and Miss Lizzie Derricks, who acted in the capacity of groomsman and bridesmaid.

In the evening a large number of invited guests assembled at the home of the Mr. and Mrs. Matt Derricks, the parents of the bride, where there was a reception and dance, and a very pleasant evening was spent. The young couple have the best wishes of their many friends for their future happiness.

TEACHERS INSTITUTE.

A Large Attendance at the One Now in Progress Here.

A teachers institute opened in this city on Monday morning, at which there was an unusually large attendance for the first day, there being seventy-nine enrolled. Others have come in since then until the number now aggregates eighty-five.

The studies that are being pursued are much the same as last year, and the conductors state that those in attendance seem to have come to learn and make the best of the opportunities offered. Following are those in attendance at this writing:

Anna Patt, Mary Icke, Tena Donhart, Ella Young, Elizabeth Rowland, Rose Moham, Lillian Berard, Matie Monagan, Fern Miller, Ella Dahlke, Josie Johnson, Susie Granger, Amelia Schroedel, Olga Martinson, Mary Olson, Bertha Heiser, Lucy M. Wood, Martha Hinz, Martha Mews, Anna Thompson, Pansy A. Shortt, Carrie Leach, Zita Snider, Grace Daniels, Louisa Sweat, Josie Huber, Carolyn Waser, Anna A. Johnson, Margaret Granger, Emma Johnson, Hanna Rassmussen, Katherine Corinan, Geo. W. Rowland, Edward Pomainville, Marie LaBrot, Jennie Berard, Orah A. Nissen, Myrtle Rowland, Maud E. Burroughs, Mabelle A. Rowland, Mamie Puerner, Lilyan Couture, Emmet Hiphner, Herbert A. Brooks, Levi Townsend, Caroline Nutter, E. J. Nutter, Anna Getschall, Laura M. Lemley, Jennie Raath, Edith Getschal, Mattie Bronson, Abbie M. Packard, Edith Heiser, Celia Burr, Ada A. Potter, Luella Hunt, Lucy Cournoyer, Laura Provest, Celia Vadnais, Millie Weisenborn, Almira Blain, Clara C. Youskow, Stella Potter, Cassie Raymond, Gladys Balch, Edna Kruger, Katie Hamm, Rubie Osgood, Pearle Osgood, Clyde Long, Lettie Dickson, Gertude Potter, Laura Potter, Laura Emmons, Celia McKeown, Mary G. Death of Mrs. Brazeau.

Mrs. Carrie A. Brazeau, wife of George B. Brazeau, died at her home in Port Edwards on Friday, July 24th, from appendicitis, after an illness extending over some months.

Mrs. Brazeau had been ailing more or less for some time, and her trouble eventually developed into appendicitis To relieve her it was decided to perform an operation, which was done on the 20th instant. The operation was successful, and it was thought that she would recover, but complications set in that the attending physicians were unable to cope with, and she passed away in spite of all that could be done by human hands.

Mrs. Brazeau, whose maiden name was Carrie A. Perry, was born in Tomah on the 5th of May, 1870. She was a graduate from the Tomah high school, being of the class of 1890, and was one of the bright ones of her class. She taught school at Auburndale for one year and later at Tomah. She was married on the 16th of June, 1895, to Mr. Brazeau, and they have lived the greater part of their married life at Port Edwards. Two children have been borne to them, the first, Edward, who died in infancy, and Marion Louise, who is now ten months old.

It is probable that the death of no other one person in the village of Port Edwards could have cast the cloud of gloom over the community that was caused by the demise of Mrs. Brazeau. Loved as she was by all who knew her in a comunity where all are neighbors, her loss was felt all the more keenly. Words fail to express the sorrow or contribute to the consolation of the bereaved husband. The loss of a loving wife is beyond comparison, and the community unites in extending the most heartfelt sympathy.

The funeral was held on Sunday afternoon from the Methodist church in this city, the friends assembling at the family home at Port Edwards and then coming to this city. Many beautiful floral tributes bespoke the love and esteem in which the deceased had been held during her life. The pall bearers were Dr. D. A. Telfer, T. E. Mullen, A. G. Miller, O. W. Dodge, Clarence Jasperson and W. S. Johnson.

Among the friends and relatives from abroad who were present to attend the last sad rites were Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Broodwell and daughter of Sparta, Miss Bessie Smith, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Johnson of Tomah, Mrs. George Zenier of Asotin, Wash., Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Perry and Miss Ella Perry of Tomah, and Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Perry of Bidwell, Iowa.

Due to Cady's Fishways.

The law passed by the legislature in 1901 through the efforts of Assemblyman F. A. Cady of this county, requiring that all dams in the Yellow river, be provided with suitable fishways or passages for fish up the river, has had the effect of greatly improving the fishing in the upper course of the river. Formerly there was little or no fishing north of Pittsville, but this season many bass and pickerel have been caught in the upper portion of the stream and even in the branches. In two days fishing last week Herman Kuethe of this city caught ten bass and one pickerel weighing over fifteen pounds in all. The largest bass captured weighed two pounds and a half and the bass that was hooked but got away weighed five pounds and four ounces. Anglers from here are already taking advantage of the improvement in the Yellow as a fishing place.—Marshfield Times.

Street Fairs and Business.

Stevens Point has had her carnival and since it ended on Saturday night the merchants of that city have apparently been trying to figure out where the profit is for them, but according to all accounts are unable to do so. As an amusement feature it was a howling success, but from a business standpoint it was a decited frost.

This has been the experience in every place where these carnivals have been held. Large crowds are drawn to the city and the attractions are liberally patronized and everybody has a good time, but merchants who make the guarantee, and sometimes have to cough up liberally in order to meet a shortage, are left in the lurch.

The mere fact of a crowd being in town does not always mean that business is good. The crowd may be going without the necessities of life in order to patronize the attractions, so that business is not only dull for the few days the carnival is in progress, but it is often felt for some days afterward.

If you are looking for a wild and woolly time, with license to do things that would not be countenanced under ordinary circumstances, the carnival is a success, but from a business view point it does not seem to be much of a success. Other towns have had much the same experience, and they seldom consider the proposition a second time.

Gun Club Scores.

The gun club held several events at their grounds last Sunday afternoon, the following being the scores:

First event, 15 birds—Frank Brown 13, Geo. Brown 4, Drumb 10, Mosher 13, Scott 12, Nash 11, Church 10, Mason 9.

Second event, 15 birds—F. Brown 14, Drumb 12, Mosher 12, F. Boles 13, Scott 14, Nash 11, Church 10, Mason 8.

Third event, 15 birds—Brown 12, Drumb 13, Mosher 11, Boles 10, Nash 12, Mason 7, Bartholomew 5, Scott 13.

Fourth event, 15 birds—Brown 14, Drumb 9, Mosher 12, Boles 11, Nash 6, Mason 10, Scott 11, Kain 8.

Fifth event, 15 birds—Mason 13, Nash 11, Brown 14, Mosher 11, Drumb 11, Scott 11.

Sixth event, 15 birds—Mason 14, Nash 9, Brown 13, Mosher 14, Drumb 10, Scott 14.

Seventh event, 15 birds—Mason 14, Scott 14, Nash 12, Drumb 14.

A challenge has been received by the local club from the Stevens Point team and as the members here have accepted it is probable that a match between the two teams will occur in the near future.

An Exciting Runaway.

Misses Edith and Kathryn Nash had a narrow escape from serrious injury on Saturday while crossing the bridge in a buggy, and those who rushed to the scene of the accident were most agreeably surprised to find that nobody was hurt.

The affair started with a farmers team on the west side, which ran away and headed across the bridge at a good speed. When near the center of the bridge the hind wheel of the farm wagon caught the hind wheel of the buggy in which the two young ladies were seated, turning it completely over, and throwing the two ladies to the road in a very forcible manner. The buggy was a total wreck, and it seemed like a miracle to those that had witnessed the accident that the ladies escaped without injury. The runaway team was stopped on the bridge without doing any damage to themselves.

Held for Assault.

The case of the State of Wisconsin against Edward Whitney of Sherry for assault with intent to kill, was brought up for a preliminary hearing before Justice Brown on Tuesday.

The man making the complaint is Louis Jaques, also of Sherry, and and his witnesses testimony was to the effect that Whitney had assaulted him in a saloon at Sherry, and after knocking him to the ground he had kicked him, and then drawing a rock from his pocket, Whitney had beaten Jaques, wounding him severely about the head.

The justice found there was sufficient evidence to bind the prisoner over to the circuit court, which was done.

Marceau-Chandler.

Albert F. Marceau and Miss Genevieve Chandler were married on Thurday at the Catholic parsonage, Rev. F. Van Roosmalen officiating. After the ceremony a wedding dinner was served at the home of the bride's mother.

The young couple left that afternoon on the eastbound Green Bay train for a short wedding tour, after which they will return to this city and make their home here. The Tribune unites with a host of friends in wishing Mr. and Mrs. Marceau a happy journey thru life.

WAYS OF WINGED WOOERS.

Incidents Illustrating the Comical Side of Bird Life.

Wooing time brings to the front the comical side of bird life, and methods are as varied among our feathered neighbors as among ourselves. The extremes of dignified courtship and disreputable scrimmage were shown by two well known birds, when the presence of a rival intensified affairs.

Two purple finches, suitors for the favor of the same sparrowlike maiden, placed themselves on each side about a foot from her and offered a musical contest. First one burst into rapturous song, flying up into the air, feathers fluffed out and snowy breast and rosy shoulders more lovely than ever. The solo finished, he dropped back to his perch and politely waited, while his rival poured out his madrigal. This alternate display continued several minutes, and apparently the umpire found it hard to choose, for she evaded decision by taking flight—both suitors following.

Different was the method of two orchard orioles, one in the immature plumage of the second year, the other in the full glory of maturity. This was a wrangle, accompanied by scolding and avian vituperation from beginning to end. If the theory of selection by fine dress be true, decision should have been easy, but after a whole day's trial the fair one ended it by a truly feminine scorn of theories, eloping with her plainer suitor, leaving the gorgeous elder to console himself with another bride—which he did before the sun went down.—Collier's Weekly.

War.

There is, besides a pleasure in order, a very real fear of disorder. A mob, a fire or a runaway horse arouses a sensation of terror in the spectator quite apart from their potentiality of harm to himself. Mere force is not, as is supposed, the last argument of man. A civilized war would have more terrors for the stockjobber than the cottager were it not for the threat of ungoverned force veiled behind the punctilio of Christian fighting. We are never quite certain of an army. The disciplined brigade which nowadays captures the enemy's capital as tenderly as it would guard its own has, nevertheless, the same badges on its buttons as those which were fouled with the rape of San Sebastian and the murder of Bazeilles. It may drown its manners at any moment in a torrent of blood and tears, and statesmen and others never forget the fact. War is but the crust of the volcano. Fires of unutterable horror hum beneath. The very perfection of the discipline which controls them is evidence of man's dread of disorder, for it is only fear that welds so strongly the furnace doors.—Blackwood's.

Diplomatic Permanency.

It is likely to be the case in America that as time goes on and our relations with foreign powers become more and more complicated and pressing permanence in consular and diplomatic office, based upon knowledge and proved fitness, will be the rule. This may mean that it will not be so common a practice to take scholars and authors from private life and place them suddenly in foreign consulates and missions. But even then it is likely that our literature will be enriched by the work of men who have become authors while enjoying the opportunities for new studies and broader observation afforded by the foreign service of their country, so that if hitherto literature has contributed to diplomacy hereafter we shall see our diplomacy contributing to our literature, as has not infrequently already been the case.—Century.

The Roman Lupetto.

The Roman lupetto, which is almost indistinguishable from the so called Pomeranian dog, invariably tries to bury or cover over any food given him which he does not like. If fed on a loose druggeet he will skillfully cover up the obnoxious food; if the carpet is nailed down so that he cannot do this he goes through the exact process with his nose which would turn over the plate if it were movable. The lupetto has a general contempt for any but meat diet, and, though he may condescend to accept bread and milk out of deference to his owner (many of them would not make this concession), he is sure to go through the form of protest first.

Birdskin Garments.

Eskimo women wear the most curious kind of underclothing, its peculiarity being that it is made of the skins of birds. These skins, before being sewed together, are chewed well by the women in order to make them soft. About a hundred skins are required to make a shirt, and the labor of chewing the skins which form their garments is quite enough to account for the massive, well developed jaws of Eskimo women.

THE HIDDEN DOOR

Sackett street woke up one Tuesday morning to find that the shutters had not been taken down from the windows of Burchard's shop. For thirty-two years old Burchard, as everybody called him, had opened his shop for business six days of the week at 7 o'clock in the morning. He had never taken a business day off or lost one through sickness.

The belief was when the shop was found closed that the old man had died in his bed, and about 8:30 o'clock the police came to pick the lock of the door and effect an entrance. All doors and windows were found securely fastened, and there were no tracks to be found in the shop of intruders. The officers fully expected to find the dead body of the old man in his bedroom, but much to their surprise no grewsome spectacle met their gaze. As a matter of fact, old Burchard could not be found about the place either living or dead.

After a thorough search it was reasoned that he had been called away on business and that the police had been overofficious. One of their number was therefore left to guard the shop until the proprietor should return and the excitement subsided.

Old Burchard did not return. After a week the case was taken up again, and parties were found who had seen him put up his shutters and lock his door at 9 o'clock Monday night. He had said nothing of going away, and he had left no message within the shop. All the watches and clocks belonging to his customers were there, as also about $3,000 worth of goods, and among his papers were two notes falling due on the day after his strange disappearance. He owed no man a dollar, and the idea that he had run away was absurd. The city was searched and the man advertised for, but the week went by and no clew was secured.

One of the strange features of the case was that no money could be found. The old man never did business with the banks, and no one had ever seen a safe in his shop. He handled thousands of dollars yearly, but where did he keep it? He often loaned money on diamonds and plate, but where he deposited them for safe keeping no one had ever learned. Unless he had gone away and taken his cash with him there ought to be a fortune hidden away in that old shop somewhere. People to the number of a dozen who had raised cash on personal property came forward to say so, but hunt as they did the searchers could find nothing outside the regular stock.

The next of kin was a brother, living a thousand miles away. He came on and renewed the search. When it panned out nothing he hired men to raze the building to the ground, and every brace and beam was tested as it was removed. The work went on until only the cellar walls were left, and stone masons tested these with their hammers and found no hollow spots. The bottom of the cellar was dug up to a depth of three feet, but no cavities or iron bound boxes were discovered. That ended the search, and then a detective was employed to take the case up as a whole.

He was a shrewd fellow, but what could he do? A man locks himself into his shop at night. He is missing next morning, with all the doors still locked and the keys on the inside. He owes no man a cent, but leaves thousands of dollars' worth of property behind him. Two hundred newspapers give the affair publicity, and a million people perhaps are on the watch for a man described so and so, but not the slightest trace can be discovered. What was there for a detective to work on?

Years went by and the cellar remained open. No one wanted to buy the site. In time the Burchard mystery ceased to be talked about, and a new generation of boys grew up to play hide and seek in the cellar. Ten years had gone by when three or four boys jumped into the cavity one day after a football which had been kicked there. In the struggle for the ball it was kicked here and there, and finally fell into a hole at the base of the crumbling west wall. In trying to recover it the boys pulled away a stone, and a minute later they had discovered a hidden door and solved the vexatious mystery.

Old Burchard had constructed a stone vault under the back yard, with an opening from the cellar. He was a cunning worker, and in making the door he had bolted thin slabs of stone to planks and hung the hinges on the inside. The keyhole looked like a fracture in one of the stones, and the whole was so artfully arranged that of the hundreds of men who had searched not one had suspected the location of the door. In their tests the stone masons probably missed that particular spot.

You are prepared to learn that old Burchard's bones were found within. The door had swung on him as he entered the vault to put away his money for the night and had become jammed. The foul air had killed him within an hour. In that vault were found upward of $80,000 in cash and all the property he had loans on, and of the body there were only bones and dust.

Of course everybody said that a secret door should have been suspected and looked for, just as if it hadn't been, and all the detectives remembered advising the heir to dig up the back yard to look for the vault. Nevertheless, three or four rollicking boys got $1,000 apiece for solving the mystery that puzzled thousands of older brains.

HONEST ABE, U. S. M.

The Rural Mail Carrier Relates a Case of Poetry.

[Copyright, 1903, by C. B. Lewis.]

SEVERAL times of late when I have had mail for Uncle Joe White at the Red Bridge farm I noticed that he was looking worried and out of sorts, but I asked no questions and he volunteered no information until the other day. Then, as I drove up, he said to me:

"Abe, I'm in a heap of trouble over my son Dan, and I want your advice."

"And what's the matter with Dan?" I asked.

"Well, about four weeks ago he took to poetry, and he's been actin' like a 'tarnal fool ever since. I can't get one day's work a week out o' him. He's at that poetry from morning till night, and many a night he's up till midnight. He's got an idea that he's a new Tennyson and that he's going to become a great man. I've argued and coaxed and threatened, but it don't do no good.

"Here's some of the stuff he's written, and I want you to read it and tell me what you think."

The first poem handed up read as follows:

She's false to me, the girl I loved;
My happiness she's shattered,
My heart will never love again
Because my faith is scattered.

The second one read:

Talk not to me of life and love,
Talk not of roses red;
Talk not of buds and sunny skies,
But rather of the dead.

"Has he been in love and got the throw down?" I asked of Uncle Joe.

"Not as I know of. He jest seemed to feel that way, you see. Here is one that is different."

The one that was different read:

"To arms! To arms!" Sir Henry cried.
"To arms, my brave defenders!"
And each one buckled on his sword
And tightened his suspenders.

Then to the fray Sir Henry rode
And to the fray was followed,
And every time he killed a man
Most gleefully he hollered.

"I don't know a durned thing about poetry," explained Uncle Joe, "but I do know when a feller is making a fool o' himself. That's what Dan is doing now, and I want to stop him. I'm not going to board and lodge and clothe him and let him sprawl around on the grass and tinker poetry. He was eating dinner the other day when he jumped up to write this down:

"The flowers of May are nothing to me,
And nought are the roses of June;
I would lay down and expire for the love
of Mariah
And die in the full of the moon.

"Abe, is Dan a fool or a poet?" asked Uncle Joe as I finished reading the above.

"A little of both, I think," I replied.

"Will he ever git rich as a poet?"

"I hardly think so."

"Then, durn his hide, he's got to quit this nonsense and git into the cornfield. I want to do what's right by my children, Abe, but they've got to do what's right by me.

"Right now, when Dan ought to be hustling with a hoe, he's out under an apple tree writing poetry with his tongue hanging out and his eyes rolled up. If you say so I'll go out there and jump him two feet high and scare all the poetry out of him."

"I wouldn't be too sudden, Uncle Joe," I answered.

"How too sudden?"

"Well, I'd give him a little warning—a little poetic warning. After I'm gone you might wander out that way and carelessly say to Dan:

"A farmer named White he had a son,
And the son he was a great poet,
And verses wrote he of meadow and lea,
And fast was the price he did go it."

"Yes, Abe, and what else?" asked Uncle Joe.

"Then you can sort o' walk around

THE POET AT WORK.

Dan as if you were looking for something in the grass and continue:

"The blossoms of May don't blossom for me;
Unheeded the song of the crow;
The old spotted cow is nought to me now
Because of my heart full of woe."

"That's it, Abe. I begin to see."

"Dan will probably stop writing poetry to look up at you, but don't give him any attention. Rest your hand on your heart and look up at the sky and repeat:

"Talk not to me of summer skies,
Talk not of winds a-blowing;
Talk not of plows and drags and sich
And crops that should be growing."

"Keep 'er up, Abe—keep 'er up. I'm catching on."

"Then you softly side step toward Dan and carelessly spit on your hands and repeat:

"'Arise, arise!' the father said,
'For glory doth await thee,
And if thou stayest here behind
Thy daddy he will skate thee.'"

NEW SHORT STORIES

Fired In the Air.

Apropos of Senator Foraker's recent statement that the president was "quick on the trigger, but not too quick," C. B. Stackhouse of Omaha tells an amusing story of the president's western trip, says the New York Tribune. The presidential train had pulled into Hastings, the end of a division, and, following his usual custom, Mr. Roosevelt sent for the fireman and engineer and, shaking hands with them, made a complimentary little speech on the skill with which they had handled his train, concluding with these words:

"You and I have a right to be on fraternal terms, for, you know, I am an honorary member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen."

The remark was received with dead silence, to the president's amazement, and the men departed without replying.

Turning to a railroad official, Mr. Roosevelt inquired why his little speech fell so flat and was told that at the time of the Burlington strike the engineers and firemen on that road severed all connection with the unions, and the men whom he had addressed were what his "brother firemen" would contemptuously term "scabs."

"That," says Mr. Stackhouse, "was a time when the president was too quick on the trigger."

The Doctor's Certificate.

Letters come by the thousand to the pension bureau and among them many strange ones. This is one received from a "doctur" in North Carolina in reference to an application for a pension:

A Helping Hand.

"Gracious!" exclaimed the stranger in the west. "What a cruel country this is!"

"How's thet, stranger?" asked the tough citizen.

"Why, I just heard that a fellow was shot down here yesterday for lending a helping hand to a fellow mortal!"

"Lending a helping hand, did yeh say?" queried the cowboy. "Why, I remember the case."

"How was it?"

"Alkali Ike wus a-playin' a poker game an' he slipped three aces t' his partner under th' table. Of course, somebody shot 'im f'r lendin' thet soht of a helpin' hand!"—Baltimore Herald.

The Canary's Claws.

If you have a canary or other cage bird look to its claws from time to time, for in a state of captivity the bird's nails grow so long that they need cutting. If this be neglected the bird is in danger of getting its nails caught in the cage and hanging there till it dies. Use a sharp pair of nail scissors and take care not to cut more than just the tips of the nails. If you hold the bird in a good light you will see a little red "thread" in each nail. This you must avoid or you will draw blood and hurt your little pet.

Inherited.

"And now," said Professor Longhunter as he greeted Henry Peck, "what shall we make of your little boy—a lecturer? He has a sincere taste for it."

"I know he has," replied the male parent. "He inherits it from his mother."—Schoolmaster.

How Trees Cool the Air.

We think of a tree as a cooling agent because its shade protects us from the heat of the sun, but it cools the air in another way that is not generally known; in fact, it cools the air around it as a lump of ice cools a vessel of water.

The tree has a body temperature of about 45 degrees, just as we have a body temperature of 98 degrees, which is not affected by outside influences. It is the tree's blood heat, so to speak. So that the air around it is cooled by the tree itself as well as by the shade it makes.

When a tree in full leaf is struck by a strong wind we wonder that it is not torn all to pieces. And so it would be but for the way the limbs and twigs are arranged by nature. That arrangement is such that the effect of the wind is broken, for the limbs sway and move in a hundred directions instead of one, and the force of the blast is so scattered that it is comparatively harmless.

If the limbs all moved at once in the same direction no tree could escape being torn apart.

Pleasure In the Heavens.

There is a satisfaction in learning the names and positions of the stars that does not belong to the study of the planets. The stars apparently never change so far as their position relative to each other is concerned. The planets are always moving, and to those who do not watch the heavens with particular attention it is a cause of surprise very often to find a "new star" adorning a certain section of the heavens. If, however, this newcomer be carefully observed from night to night, it will be found to change its distance from the fixed stars, and the observer will discover that it is a planet and at liberty to wander about from place to place under the sole condition that it obeys certain rules of motion. When the bright stars that grace the heavens become familiar to observers, they will know just what to expect on each succeeding season.

The Macgregors.

The history of the Macgregor race is one of persecution. In the early years of the seventeenth century every man's hand was raised against them, and they could be mutilated and slain with impunity. When, in a less barbarous age, they were invited to join the solemn league and covenant, they replied that "as they bore the crown on the point of their swords they would not fail to use the latter in defense of the former." The Macgregors were forbidden to use their family name by James VI. The proscription was removed by Charles II., only to be again inflicted in the reign of William and Mary. Indeed it was not till 1822 that a royal license to use the name was granted to Sir Charles Macgregor, until then known as "Murray."

A LOVE THAT NEVER DIED

[Original.]

When General Zachary Taylor's troops were in Mexico confronting those of Santa Anna an incident of secret service took place which was not only thrilling, but which contained a romance.

One evening two officers, one in the uniform of a Mexican colonel, the other that of a captain, rode into the advance Mexican camps and asked to be conducted to the tent of the commanding officer. Arriving there, they found Major Fourtado, to whom they presented an order purporting to be signed by General Santa Anna directing that they be afforded every facility to inspect the camps. This was given them. They rode over the ground, noted the approaches, and as they were about to depart they were arrested and taken to Major Fourtado, the commandant. On them were found sketches and memoranda that proved them to be spies. They confessed and were informed that they would be shot at daylight the next morning.

The men were Lieutenant Colonel Otis Winchester and Lieutenant Warren Holmes of the American army. Colonel Winchester, knowing that certain information was extremely necessary to his general, had volunteered to make a bold attempt to secure it. Lieutenant Holmes was sent with him, it being hoped that if Winchester was taken Holmes might get through and back with the information. The uniforms had been obtained from Mexican officers, prisoners of war. Santa Anna's signature had been forged from a dispatch which had been captured on the messenger who bore it.

Neither slept during the night and shortly before dawn wrote brief letters to their homes, which they were told would be forwarded under flag of truce to General Taylor. Winchester, much the older man, was composed, but Holmes suffered from all the depression to be expected in one about to be shot.

"Are you related," asked Winchester, "to Edward C. Holmes of the class of 182—, at West Point?"

"He was my father," replied Holmes.

Winchester said nothing, but looked at the young man with a melancholy stare. At the moment a messenger from Major Fourtado entered.

"The commandant," he said, "is especially reluctant to take the lives of two such brave men. He deems one sufficient to satisfy the military law common in such cases and directs me to inform you that you are permitted to draw lots, the one losing to be executed at once, the other to be exchanged."

Winchester again turned his glance on young Holmes, and a sigh—it might have been of relief—escaped him. The two officers exchanged letters to their respective families, to be taken north by the one escaping death. Then they were conducted to Fourtado's headquarters.

The commandant placed two stones in his hat, the one black, the other white. Colonel Winchester claimed by right of seniority to draw, the first stone drawn being decisive. He stepped up to Fourtado, who sat at a table holding the hat. Put in his hand and withdrawing it tossed a black stone on the table.

"You have lost," said the major, laying down the hat. Then, turning to the guard, he directed that the prisoners be taken away. A few minutes later a volley was heard without, and Otis Winchester had been executed.

Major Fourtado took up his hat and before placing it on his head put in his hand to withdraw the remaining stone. It was not there.

"Has any one touched the hat," he asked, surprised, "since I laid it on the table?"

Every one present disclaimed having done so.

"Gentlemen," said the major, "we have shot a noble man. He took both chances, sparing his companion."

A month later Lieutenant Holmes was exchanged. Before taking his departure for the American lines he was conducted to Major Fourtado's headquarters.

"What bond was there between you and your comrade?" asked Fourtado.

"None that I know of. General Taylor called for volunteers to attend an officer on a hazardous enterprise. I volunteered and was accepted."

"Lieutenant, I will tell you a secret. When Colonel Winchester withdrew his hand from the hat that decided your fate and his he took both stones."

The information weighed heavily upon Holmes. He remembered Winchester's mention of his father, who had died some years before, and as soon as he returned to his home went straight to his mother to ask her to enlighten him.

"Mother," he asked, "who was Otis Winchester?"

"Why do you ask, my boy?" replied the lady, starting.

The young man gave his mother the information he had received from the Mexican. It was some time before she could find her voice to speak. Then she said:

"Otis Winchester was your father's rival. They were classmates at West Point and I was a guest of the superintendent. I decided for your father."

The last five words were spoken almost in a whisper, after which there was a silence between the two, a silence which it would have been profane to interrupt and the impressiveness of which no word could depict. Then the son went to his mother and put his arms about her.

"I supposed," he said, "that this the greatest of all sacrifices was for me, and I could not understand how it could be so. I see now that it was for you."

FUNERALS IN GREECE.

They Are Somewhat of a Shock to the American Tourist.

"One thing sure to shock the American tourist is a Greek funeral," said a recently returned traveler. "It is a spectacle which most persons of convention governed decency desire to avoid, because the body of the dead is exposed in an open hearse. The coffin is shallow, so that not only the face and head, but the hands and much of the body, can be seen from the sidewalk as the procession moves through the streets.

"The lid of the coffin, frequently richly upholstered and decorated with garlands and wreaths, is carried on the hearse by the undertaker. The priest, the relatives and other mourners follow, and as the ghastly spectacle moves along it is customary for bystanders to remove their head gear and cross themselves.

"In the Athens cemeteries graves are rented for a term of years, just like the habitations of the quick. Only the wealthy own burial lots. This is invariably an evidence of wealth or aristocracy. The poor seldom dream of buying a lot or tomb. Such purchase would be deemed among them an unnecessary luxury.

"At the end of the term for which a grave is rented the bones are dug up, placed in a bag, labeled with the name and date and deposited in a general receptacle."—New York Herald.

Rewards For Lost Property.

"More lost and stolen articles would be recovered if the losers would adopt different methods in advertising for their property," said a headquarters detective the other day. "Of course honest persons do not haggle over the remuneration for returning a locket, a dog or anything else. But every one is not built along those lines. It may sound very nice to say, 'Liberal reward if returned to owner,' but there are different ideas of liberality. The sum usually dwindles in the mind of the owner when he sees his property before him, and no one knows this better than the finder.

"It is far more effective to set forth a definite sum in the advertisement. Five or twenty-five dollars means more than a vague promise to be real generous. Of course there are cases when it is not wise to be too explicit, but in nine cases out of ten a stated sum will bring better results than an indefinite offer. This is nearly always true with watches with the owner's monogram engraved on the case, as the pawnbroker refuses to loan so much on articles so easily identified."—New York Press.

Read Less, Think More.

Mere reading is a waste of time. To conduce to intelligence the reader must train the mind to concentration on the subject in hand, and to concentration must be added the effort to clothe and transmit thought in appropriate phrase.

The Sailors' Psalm.

How many people—landsmen, at all events—are aware that one of the Psalms is often called the sailors' psalm? It is of course Psalm cvii, wherein occur the beautiful and familiar words, "They that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters—these see the works of the Lord and his wonders in the deep." The psalm is usually read as part of the simple services which take place on Sundays on ships at sea. For that reason it is known as the sailors' psalm.—London Chronicle.

The Road to Success.

It is well for the young man to remember that if he finishes his education as a skilled farmer or stockman or fruit grower there are plenty of places open waiting for him at good pay, while if he becomes a minister, lawyer or doctor he may have to hunt long and far to find a place and wait long before a good living is assured.—Rockford Register.

As It Was Printed.

There is one woman poet in New York who will read proof carefully until the edge of a recent error wears off. She spent two days on a touching poem, the pivotal line of which read:

My soul is a lighthouse keeper.

When the printer finished with it the line read:

My soul is a light housekeeper.

Not Encouraging.

"Do you know," remarked the pessimist, "I think I have experienced every kind of hard luck on the list except hanging."

"Well, you shouldn't be discouraged," remarked the optimist. "Remember the old adage, 'While there is life there is hope.'"—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Same old Song.

DePere Democrat:—After a country newspaper man has hollowed himself hoarse in efforts to persuade people to patronize home merchants, and accidentally stumbles onto the fact that some of the fellows whose interests he is endeavoring to protect are sending away for their job printing, it rather shakes his faith in mankiud and makes reciprocity look like a penny with a hole in it.

This short paragraph from the Depere Democrat contains a world of truth. No doubt many a newspaper man has gone thru the experience of listening to the complaints of merchants about people sending out of town for goods, and then after he has hied himself to his office and written out a roast for the fellow that traded out of town, he receives a bill from the merchant made out on stationery that was printed by some cheap printing concern out of town.

Yes, it shakes the faith of the editor in mankind, but does it alter the facts? All editors know that it is the man who does the most whining and the least advertising that is the quickest to break a rule that he wants others to observe.

There are cases where the merchant himself is to blame for people going out of town for their goods. They have asked the merchant to order something for them, which the merchant claimed to do, but the length of time necessary to secure the article convinced the purchaser that it was not ordered for months, and in some instances not at all.

The old story of trading at home has been told and retold by every paper in the country many times, until it should be familiar to all, and barrels of ink have been used in telling how the town can be benefitted thereby, and while every man and woman who reads the articles may not believe in them the way the editor does, it does not alter the fact that it is good advice just the same, and may make some converts to a good course.

The Tribune tries to follow the golden rule. "Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you," and the mere fact that our neighbor does not follow the same rule does not swerve us in our purpose. Had we stored up and remembered all the mean things that have occurred during a twenty years experience in the newspaper business, and attempted to return a blow for every one we have received, it is entirely probable that life would have long ago become a burden.

So, in following this rule, we continue to tell the people to patronize the home merchant. He may get his printing outside, but patronize him anyway. The merchant who goes out of town for his printing is in the same boat with his customer who sends out of town. He's bound to get skinned in the end; in fact many of them get skinned every time only they don't known it, but when they do find it out, they will reform, not on account of sentiment, but because it is business.

Want a New Bridge.

People about the city are now loud in their condemnation of the fact that the bridge is being rebuilt instead of a new one being put in. The reason for this is that the travel on the bridge is so extensive and the old structure is so narrow that at times it can hardly accommodate the teams that cross.

Many of the people in their condemnation have a tendency to blame it all onto the city fathers, saying that they could as well have expended thirty thousand dollars and had a new bridge as to have wound up with the same old structure made of different materials. This is not true, for the city is now carrying all the debt she can legally stagger under, the public improvements of the past few years having been something enormous considering the population and wealth of the city.

Everybody would like to see a new bridge, one that we could hold horse races on if necessary, but everything cannot be done at once, and this is one of the improvements that will have to bide its time.

It has been suggested, and probably with reason, that an ordinance be passed by the city council making it a misdemeanor to leave a horse or team standing on the street untied. Hardly a day passes that there is not a runaway or two in the city and as most of them head for the bridge it is a miracle that nothing more serious has occurred. Tie your horses and protect your own property as well as others.

A story is going the rounds which is in effect that the Empress of Corea is a Wisconsin Woman, and several papers have taken the trouble to deny the tale, stating that there is not an atom of truth in it. As Corea is but little larger than a good-sized Wisconsin farm, we cannot see that it would be anything strange to find a Wisconsin woman running the whole outfit.

Mill Dam at Necedah Goes Out.

Necedah Republican: The mill dam across the Yellow river in this village went out a little after five o'clock last Saturday afternoon. The break came near the east end, and two piers and the dam for one third of its lenght was wrecked.

The critical moment was announced by loud noises caused by the creaking and snapping of the huge timber as the structure gave way before the wall of inprisoned water, and the water filling the reservoir extenting for miles up river, thus liberated became an angry flood that raged through the wrecked dam in a mighty torrent into the river below. In the course of a few hours the mill-pound was entirely drained of water, except for a little rivulet around its edges that once served as the channel of the stream, or a few deep holes here and there over its surface. It was an unusual sight that met the eyes of Necedah people last Sunday as they looked out over where usually is a nice body of water, and found a dark, dreary, sunken waste, covered with mud, slime, bark and drift wood, with an immense growth of moss, weeds and reeds laid flat, and the monotony relieved occasionally by a stump or half-buried saw log.

This old mill dam is one of the land marks of our village. It was built forty-nine years ago and is about two hundred feet in lenght. Some years ago there was a washout near where the present break occurred. Last season considerable time and money was spent in repairs and much leakage was stopped. This spring a portion of the apron on the east side was carried away by the high water. The undertow of water pouring over the dam at this point to undermine the foundation and no doubt contributed its share in producing Saturday's disaster. Just above the dam at this point is an old pier, and water falling from this strikes the breast of the dam and this is cited as another cause of the mischief.

The wrecking of the dam falls as a serious blow and set back to the Necedah Flour Mill Company. The company holds the water power on a ninty-nine year lease and are required to keep the dam in good repair. Since the repairs were made last summer the power has proved more efficient and nearly adequate to the company's needs, as since then both mill and electric light plant have been operated by water power, with exception of about three weeks. While it has not been definitely settled, it is quite probable that the dam will be rebuilt in a substantial way.

As it has become necessary to use steam power for the lighting plant, the flour mills will be operated nights also.

Jacobson Brothers of this city expect to furnish plans for the reconstruction of the dam in the near future. They have been on the ground and looked over the premises with a view to starting the work.

A six-year-old heard that a baby had arrived next door. He visited the house shortly after to investigate matters.

"I understand that you have a baby here" volunteered Young Amercia strutting up to the father boldly.

"Yes, Willie, she came from a big store in Bangor, and we are all very happy."

"Say, tell us, mister, how many yellow trading stamps did yer get?" queried Willie, earnestly.—Ex.

Public Auction.

The board of education of the city of Grand Rapids will sell at public auction on Thursday, August 6, at nine o'clock a. m., in front of the court house, to the highest bidder for cash, all of the buildings on the two lots recently owned by the Frank Howe estate in the first ward. This will include besides the house, the rock in the foundation walls and the front and west side fences. The board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

By order of, SCHOOL BOARD.

Network Girl.

She wears a net work waist,
Her stockings are network, too;
I look at her openwork sleeves and see
Her soft arms gleaming through.
When she raises her fluffy skirts
A litte way, ah, me!
I see the dainty bits of white
That peep through the filligree.

You say it is rude of me
To look through her network waist,
Or to gaze below when she lifts her skirts,
So dainty and eke so chaste?
Nay, say not so! It were rude
If I should neglect to see,
For why is she wearing her network things
If not to be seen by me?

BRIEF CITY ITEMS

Some Mild Weather.—Last Saturday was one of the most oppressive days we have had in this locality for some time, and many thought that it was the warmest day we had had so far this summer. This was not the case however. At the Court house that day mercury stood at 86 when the highest point was reached, while on the 7th and 8th of July it registered 88½. This is fairly warm weather for this section, but of course does not compare with what has been happening futher south.

Enlarging School Grounds.—The school board has purchased two lots from the Howe estate which will be used to enlarge the school grounds of the east side Ward school. The lots were sold at public auction and brought $1135. They make an addition of land 132 x 102 feet, and it is the intention of the board to enlarge the grounds still farther. The buildings on the property will be sold at auction.

The Eagles Dance.—The Fraternal Order of Eagles gave a dance at their hall on Tuesday evening, which was a very pleasant affair from a social viewpoint. A number of electric fans have been placed in the hall which proved a very nice thing on a warm night. The Big Four furnished the music, which was all that could be desired.

Got More Workmen.—About thirty Austrians arrived in the city last week and have been put to work by the Consolidated Water Power company on the dam. The company was unable to secure enough men to do the common labor so as to carry the work forward as rapidly as they wanted, hence the importation of outside labor.

Purchased Some Land.—L. M. Nash has purchased from Herman R. Behrend of Minneapolis a track of five acres of land on the river bank just opposite the Wickham addition. The place is favorably situated and will undoubtedly prove a good investment.

Struck by Lightning.—Lightning damaged the steeple of the Catholic church on Tuesday afternoon during the rain and electric storm. Some of the siding was torn off, but the cost of repairs will be only nominal.

Lost the Canvas.—Some person or persons stole about 25 yards of canvas belonging to Bossert Bros. on Sunday night. The canvas had been used to cover a new cement walk that the firm was building in front of Geo E. Hoskinson's place.

Meat Market Change.—Owen Love and James McCarthy have bought out the interest of A. F. Stanke of the firm of Stanke & Reiland, and the firm will be known as Jas. McCarthy & Co. They will operate a market on each side of the river.

Entertained His Friends.—Guy Wood entertained a party of friends at his home on Monday evening. There was dancing and other amusements, and a very pleasant evening was spent by the young people.

Public Stenographer.—Miss May Dumas has opened an office in the Mackinnon block for the purpose of doing stenographic and typewriter work for the public in general.

Professor H. W. Prentis tells a joke on himself with much enjoyment. One day during an examination, when he was visiting the various room, he stopped to ask a very bright boy a sum in algebra, and although the problem was comparatively easy, he could not answer it. Professor Prentis remarked with some show of severity:

"My boy, you ought to be able to do that. At your age George Washington was a surveyor."

The boy looked him str ight in the eye and answered;

"Yes, sir; and at your age he was President of the United States."

The conversation dropped at that point.—Ex.

"While my business has been steadily increasing for years," remarked a druggist, "I find I don't sell as much hair restorer as I used to."

"Perhaps people are not so credulous in these days," suggested his friend. "Besides, after trying many of the preparations in vain a man would naturally stop buying them."

"No," continued the druggist, "I don't think those are the reasons. Human nature is as credulous as ever, and the ranks of the baldheads are being constantly recruited. I guess I must look for the reason nearer home. Twenty years ago I wasn't bald myself."—Philadelphia Ledger.

AT THE GUARD-HOUSE

A Barrack Room Love Story...

Copyright, 1905, by American Press Association

By P. Y. BLACK

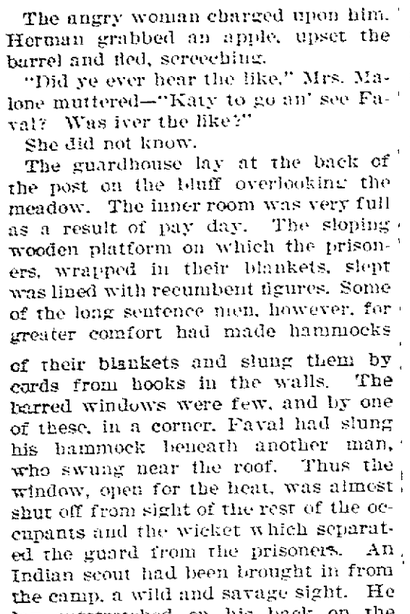

The angry woman charged upon him. Herman grabbed an apple, upset the barrel and fled, screeching.

"Did ye ever hear the like," Mrs. Malone muttered—"Katy to go an' see Faval? Was iver the like?"

She did not know.

The guardhouse lay at the back of the post on the bluff overlooking the meadow. The inner room was very full as a result of pay day. The sloping wooden platform on which the prisoners, wrapped in their blankets, slept was lined with recumbent figures. Some of the long sentence men, however, for greater comfort had made hammocks of their blankets and slung them by cords from hooks in the walls. The barred windows were few, and by one of these, in a corner, Faval had slung his hammock beneath another man, who swung near the roof. Thus the window, open for the heat, was almost shut off from sight of the rest of the occupants and the wicket which separated the guard from the prisoners. An Indian scout had been brought in from the camp, a wild and savage sight. He lay outstretched on his back on the floor, howling lugubriously and beating on the boards with extended fists. In his drunken muddle headedness he had an idea that the white men were about to hang him, and his howls sank to a long, horrible, wailing death song.

Amid the noise and the heat and the stench of the overcrowded room Faval was wide awake. For half an hour after taps so he remained, until the lamp at the door was removed. Soon as the post, recovered from its periodical outburst of pay day riot, resumed its regular nightly air of repose, the lonely sentries began their monotonous calls. Faval's window opened on the back of the guardhouse, and he could not see the sentry on No. 1, but very distinctly there came to his ears the methodical beat of the soldier's shoes on the porch and at last his first proclamation to his brother sentries of the hour.

"Easily!" he muttered and then huddled in his hammock.

"Ten o'clock," Faval murmured. "Two hours yet. It is a year!"

As the distant calls came faintly from the faraway posts and No. 1 repeated "All's well!" the young musician stealthily reached from his hammock and grasped one of the window bars. It shook beneath the pressure of his slender fingers. "Easily!" he muttered and then huddled in his hammock as he heard the sentry challenge and quickly shout to the sergeant inside:

"Officer of the day, turn out the guard!"

Had they suspected? Had they discovered?

"Never mind the guard!"

The trembling lad heard the officer step on the porch and the sergeant make his report. Faval sweated with fear. What was it? Were they talking about him? Would the sergeant, would Holmes, betray him and have him put in irons? It was likely. He had done as Katy had told him to do, but he could not understand when she had said that Holmes was his friend. The officer went away, and, trembling, Faval crept from his hammock and slipped on shoes and clothes and stayed at the bars, peering out anxiously.

"He won't be back until early morning," the corporal of the guard remarked, with a yawn. "Daddy Dodds is getting old and likes his snooze even when he's officer of the day. Where are you off to, Holmes?"

The sergeant in charge replied gruffly, as was his wont.

"There were so many prisoners coming in I had no time to get my blankets. Take the keys till I come back."

He went out, but he did not go to the barracks for his blankets. It was dark and moonless now, and at the foot of the bluff he met the girl. She was very pale, but in her there was no sign of fear. Her eyes glittered with determination. He tried to take her hand, but she withdrew it and whispered:

"Not yet—not until it is done. Is he ready?"

"He ought to be ready. I have done all I can," he answered, a little sullenly. "At midnight I shall engage No. 1's attention."

She gave a little laugh of triumph.

"I must see him," she said. "I must say goodby. I know the window."

He flashed up at that with suspicious anger.

"What do you want to see him for?" he whispered sullenly. "You told me to save him, and I have, but—but you are mine now. I don't want you to see him."

She laughed and put her hand in his.

"I know, Holmes," she said, "you are true and—and I love you better than I ever did, but"—

He interrupted her by passionately kissing her hand, and, stooping, he could not note her frown.

"But that poor boy! He loved me, too, and—and let me say goodby?"

He let her go, and she slipped up the bluff and so to the barred window. At once Faval's hand caught hers.

"The bar?" she whispered. "It is loose. The horses are at the cottonwood clump on the river. Noel, Noel, be careful!"

"My darling, I shall be there—or shot."

She was back with Holmes immediately, and, though her eyes sparkled, she wiped them with her handkerchief.

"Poor fellow!" she said and paused and then went on: "And so he is gone forever. Thank you, sergeant. I—I do like you now."

Holmes took her in his arms and kissed her.

"God bless you, Katy," he said, filled with love, "and may he forget me if I do not make you happy all your life!"

He left her, dazed at that caress, and went back to his duty, and the girl looked after him with a smile and a sigh.

The night passed on, punctuated by the yawning sentries' calls. The men marveled at their sergeant's unaccustomed cheerfulness. He chatted with them and laughed. They remembered afterward that for once they had heard Holmes laugh. He did not lie down. At 12 the sentry called the hour, and Holmes shortly afterward left him, saying he would patrol round the guardhouse. At Faval's window he stopped. No noise came from within save that of the prisoners' snores. He peered inside and made out that Faval's hammock was empty. One bar hung loose from its fastening at the top. The sergeant put it in place softly.

"He is gone!" he thought. "Out of the way—out of the way—out of the way, and she is promised to me!"

The relief went out at 1 o'clock, and soon the tired sentries relieved came tramping in with the corporal. Holmes was lying on his bunk in the office, but not asleep. Sleep was far from his glad eyes. He heard the sentries gossip as they prepared to lie down.

"Any of the officers giving a party tonight?"

"Don't know. Why?"

"'Cause a man and a woman galloped past on the river trail. I could just see them from No. 6. They were going B—Bar ranch way, and I thought they'd maybe been visiting in officers' row."

Holmes raised his head—a man? That was all right. A woman? Who could they be? He sat up on the edge of his cot. A terrible thought filled his mind. It could not be. Yet, yet—dared she play that trick? For a minute he sat still, and then without a word of excuse he left the guardhouse. He went straight to Mother Malone's. The angry woman was still sitting there, awaiting her husband and daughter.

"Where is Katy?" the sergeant asked, and his face was so white that the scars stood out upon his brow and cheeks in scarlet.

"Where, indeed?" cried Mrs. Malone. "The baggage! She's not been in tonight! She'll leave my house! Holmes, Holmes! What is it? What has she done now?"

With a loud curse the sergeant turned on his heel and rushed off. He made for the stables of his troop and roused the stable sergeant by furious blows on the gate.

"My horse, by order of the officer of the day!" he hoarsely yelled. "A prisoner has escaped!"

If he had been capable of thought, capable of planning a sure revenge, he would first have roused the guard and sent half a troop after the fugitives. Perhaps indeed he did think, but felt that this was a matter which concerned him alone. Therefore he went swiftly at a gallop in pursuit, and the sleepy stable sergeant went back to bed, and the guard remained on watch, wondering where their sergeant had gone, but all unaware of the prisoner's escape.

The river road? He spurred his horse down the trail furiously until the post was far behind him. On his right the river flowed; on his left the land rose in rippling bluffs, a gray black mass in the starlight. In front of him he knew the long and lonely trail stretched drearily without house, without town, for a hundred miles and at last ended at the railway. He was able, with an effort, to consider that the two would spare their horses, knowing how far they had to go and hardly expecting pursuit before guard mount in the morning, when the officer of the day would make his report. They had more than an hour's start, but if he pressed hard after them he should catch up soon. That settled, he urged his horse to the utmost and gave himself up to the mad rage of jealousy and disappointment. He had known her from a child to be willful and passionate and mischievous, but he had never in his adoration believed her capable of such deceit. He did not stop to think that love had forced him to break his oath, to neglect his duty, to assist a prisoner under his charge to escape, to forfeit, if the truth became known, the trust of his officers and the name he had won in years of hard campaigning; he did not stop to think of what love might have forced her also to do. His mood was entirely selfish. He was wounded sorely, and he wished for nothing but revenge.

The dust scattered in clouds about him. The horse, in that hot night, soon was streaming sweat. He never slackened pace. Now and again there was a creek to cross, and through them he dashed, heedless of mudhole or rock or stump. Once a belated Indian freighter met him and grunted an astonished "How?" Holmes hardly saw him nor answered his greeting. In an instant he was out of sight and hearing. So he rode, blind to all he passed, his eyes glaring ahead, his teeth grating, seeking revenge for the slight and the scorn and the lie.

They had traveled more quickly than he had reckoned they would, and the sky of the midsummer morning was turning slowly from gray to violet when he saw them and drew the revolver he carried as being on guard duty. He hailed them, and through the misty dimness of the dawn they saw him and spurred ahead with a cry of fear and surprise. His horse, the fleetest in the troop, drew up upon them, but, urged by terror, they pushed on to the utmost. The sergeant was within 200 yards of them when he leveled his revolver and fired. They were too far off for pistol shooting, but the shot resulted in bringing them to a standstill. He rode slowly up and reined in, facing them. The girl sat erect in her saddle, her bosom heaving, her eyes defying him. The musician looked at him with his big, brown, sorrowful eyes, despairing. Holmes looked only on the girl, and even as he did so that which had caused all his misery in the last few years, his great love for her, came back, sweeping in on him as a flood, washing away his wrath and disappointment and longing for revenge. It was Katy Malone who faced him, his pet in her schooldays, the one thing he had ever loved. As he looked on her, flushed with exercise and indignation, he put his pistol back in the holster and the reins fell on his horse's neck, and he cared nothing for the other's presence, but held out his arms in overwhelming despair, crying:

"Katy! Katy! Why have you done this?"

The girl paused a moment in surprise, for she had surely expected an outburst of colossal rage, but in a moment she regained her usual self possession. She took the musician's hand in hers, in the protecting way she had used when she had met him in the island wood.

"Because I love him," she said.

The sergeant's head drooped low over his horse, and his tall frame shook. When he looked up his face was as gray as the morning sky. All light was gone from his eyes, even as the stars were disappearing in the heavens. He was calm now.

"You could not trust me to make you happy," he said slowly. "I begin to understand. I want to know one thing. Did you care for me at all before—became?"

She shook her head.

"Never," she said.

He sat again erect and looked up at the sky. In one instant his life stood revealed—lonely, lonely, lonely! Through all the years from the first early questionings of himself, of who his mother was and who his father, through all the years of ill used, soul souring childhood, through all the years of unfriended, starving youth, through all the years of manhood, solitary and avoided by his comrades, he saw himself, babe, child, boy, man, unfriended and alone—lonely, lonely, lonely, friendless and unloved!

He looked at the young lovers hand in hand. What good would it do to arrest him? She would only hate him the more. What good would it do to force her back? Besides, the escape must be known soon, and he, in turn, would be a prisoner. The sky was changing into blue, the sun was almost on the horizon, but round his soul the night grew very dark. For awhile they watched him, wondering, and at last he looked at them. His eyes were full of tears.

"Ride on," he said.

They did not move, hardly believing, until he waved his hands impatiently.

"Go," he said, "and—and God make you both happy!"

Without a parting word they wheeled and fled.

He watched them disappear, and a moment after the crack of a pistol rang out across the plain, and the sergeant's riderless horse, frightened, galloped back to the post.

Treat Your Kidneys for Rheumatism.

When you are suffering from rheumatism, the kidneys must be attended to at once so that they will eliminate the uric acid from the blood. Foley's Kidney Cure is the most effective remedy for this purpose. R. T. Hopkins of Polar, Wis., says: "After unsuccessfully doctoring three years for rheumatism with the best doctors, I tried Foley's Kidney Cure and it cured me. I cannot speak too highly of this great medicine." Sold by Johnson & Hill Co.

Wilkie Collins Writes of a Title.

Church Hill Cottage, Broadstairs,
Aug. 15, 1859.

My Dear Wills—I send you inclosed (and registered—for I should go distracted if it was lost) my first number. Please let me have duplicate proofs as soon as possible, for I want to see something in connection with the story which is not a mass of confusion. It is an awfully long number—between eight and nine pages; but I must stagger the public into attention, if possible, at the outset. They shan't drop a number when I begin if I can help it.

I have hit on a new title in the course of a night walk to the North Foreland, which seems to me weird and striking—"The Woman in White."

My love to Dickens. How does he do? When will he write? Have you a house to let? I am at mortal enmity with my London landlord and am resolved to leave him. Where I am to go next "God, he knows." Ta-ta.

A Dangerous Innovation.

Deacon Carter could remember the days when the minister lined out the hymn and the congregation sang it. Although he had long been too feeble to go to church, his opinions still found their way to the people.

"We shall have some good organ playing this summer," an unwary visitor remarked to the deacon's daughter in the old man's hearing. "That teacher from Boston is going to play every Sunday while Annie Trumbull is off taking a vacation."

The deacon raised his stick and his quavering voice at the same time.

"You send for the minister to come here and see me, Daughter Mary," he said as clearly as he could. "I won't have such goings on! A musician playing on that organ! Let 'em go without till Annie Trumbull gets home again."

Warning.

If you have kidney or bladder trouble and do not use Foley's Kidney Cure, you will have only yourself to blame for results, as it positively cures all forms of kidney and bladder diseases.

Brutally Tortured.

A case came to light that for persistent and unmerciful torture has perhaps never been equalled. Joe Golobick of Colusa, Calif, writes, "For 15 years I endured insufferable pain from Rheumatism and nothing relieved me though I tried everything known. I came across Electric Bitters and it's the greatest medicine on earth for that trouble. A few bottles of it completely relieved and cured me." Just as good for Liver and Kidney troubles and general debility. Only 50c. Satisfaction guaranteed by John E. Daly, druggist.

CARE OF MIRRORS.

How to Clean and Keep Them In Good Condition.

In the first place, it is well to know a good cleaner. This can be made by adding to whiting enough cold tea to make a thin paste. Remove the fly specks with warm tea and dry the mirror. Then smear some of the paste on the glass and rub with a dry cloth.

A good way to polish the mirror is with a soft cloth and a few drops of aqua ammonia, says the Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph. Cleaning with paper is not effectual unless the best quality of rag paper is used.

To scour mirrors make a paste of whiting and water. Smear the surface with it and let it dry on the glass. Then rub it off with tissue paper or with a soft newspaper. Rub gently, for the particles of grit in the paper may scratch the glass.

The following is a good way to fill in the scratches that often appear on the backs of mirrors: Scratch away the mercury for about a quarter of an inch around the scratch and wet the place with a clean rag dipped in alcohol. Take a broken piece of mirror and mark out a piece of silvering larger than the place on the mirror. Place a small drop of mercury on the center of this silvering, allowing it to remain a few minutes. Clean away the silver from around the patch and slip it from the broken glass to the place to be mended, pressing it into place with a small piece of cotton batting.

How to Press Sleeves.

In pressing sleeves, which is the bane of the amateur's life, keep a wooden rolling pin for that purpose alone. Insert in the sleeve, and the pressing of seams and wrists also is as easily done as though it were a flat surface. Cover pin with flannel. Keep a heavy piece of flannel to lay over the ironing board when pressing wool goods. This prevents the shiny spots so objectionable in a finished garment.

How to Pack a Trunk.

The secret of good packing is firmness and smoothness, and to attain these everything should be put in the trunk in layers. Before putting in the dresses have a firm layer of undergarments and then proceed with the thickest and heaviest of your skirts. The skirts should be folded as nearly as possible in the folds they take in wear. See that you lay the skirts alternately in different directions, so that if the waistband on one is to the left side of the trunk the waistband of the next is at the right side, for thus the level will be preserved. Between light and dark dresses place a towel to prevent the former soiling the latter. Fold bodices as far as can be in the lines which they take upon the figure. Put stiff, tightly crushed paper into the sleeves and also into bows and puffings to prevent their being creased and then pack as tightly as convenient. When taken out of the trunk they will be found uninjured.

How to Keep Milk Sweet.

A tiny pinch of carbonate of soda or salt put into the milk as soon as it arrives will help to prevent it from turning sour, and if it seems inclined to turn and is slowly heated to nearly boiling point and a pinch of carbonate of soda then stirred in the sourness will disappear. Some people also add a tiny pinch of sugar.

How to Fill Your Pipe.

Worshipers at the shrine of My Lady Nicotine will be interested in a correspondent's method of filling a pipe, a method from which he has obtained results greatly superior to those yielded by the old style. He places a wooden match down the center of the bowl, its lower end entering or covering the hole that leads to the stem, and, holding it in position with one finger, presses the tobacco firmly all round with the unsharpened end of a pencil. The match is then withdrawn, the pipe lighted up and the full flavor of the tobacco extracted without waste.

They were attended by Miss Laura Provest and Will Hamm. The nuptial ceremony was solemnized by Rev. Father Gara of Junction City. The wedding festivities were quiet in their simple elegance only immediate relatives and intimate friends participating. A sumptuous dinner was served at the bride's home after which the bridal party repaired to the home of the groom for supper. Mr. and Mrs. Provest will reside in Rudolph, where they will be "at home" to their friends after Aug. 1st. Congratutions.

Once more, for the benefit of those who continually attempt to have anonymous items published in a newspaper, we will state that if you want your news published in the Tribune you must have your name signed at the bottom. We do not want to publish your name, but we do want to know who the items are from. Every week communications come to the office with the request that they be published but the writer forgets to sign hisname and the items are left out. Write anything you want and send it to the office with your name at the bottom and we will give it careful consideration and if it is considered to be legitimate news it will be published. Please remember, however, that the anonomous letter does not go.

GRACE BEFORE MEAT.

Devotions of a Scotch Farmer Who Thought Well of Himself.

An old Ayrshire farmer used regularly to deliver himself of the following quaint effusion as a grace before meat:

"Tak' aff yer bonnets, honest men! Are they a' aff? Oh, Lord, weed oot a' the papists oot o' the land—pluck them oot as we do the thistle frae oot o' the gr'und. Pour doon a shooer o' whittles upo' a' the loons that wear the lawn sleeves, for they eat up the fat an' the lean o' the land an' winna let a puir body like me gang his am way. Dig a muckle dike atween us an' hell, but a far muckler ane atween us an' the wild Irish. Oh, grant that the gray mare brakna the tether nor the wind blaw doon the haystacks. Grant that we may keep the broon coo, the crummie coo an' Rowtie, an', oh, preserve us frae witches an' warlocks an' beasts wi' lang nebs that gang in amang the heather. Grant a' gude things an' gude hairsts to a' honest fowk an' a' men present an' I, my ainsel', wha am as muckle as one sax o' them. Shooer doon a blessing on a' honest men that wear blue bonnets, sic like as Abraham, Isaac an' Jacob were in the holy land o' Canaan. Gi'e to oorsels an' to a' the freen's o' Scotland weal an' fortitude till endure a' the ills an' unco's o' this life, an' as what we've gotten is a oor ain it's naebody's business. Grant a blessing on the present favor. Amen!"
—Scottish American.

Fiction In History.

Thomas Carlyle in his history of the French revolution gives a description of a naval battle June 1, 1794, off Brest between Villaret-Joyeuse, in command of the French fleet, and Admiral Howe, in which he vividly depicted the sinking of the Vengeur.

These are the concluding sentences: "Lo, all flags, streamers, jacks, every rag of tricolor that will yet run on rope flies rustling aloft; the whole crew crowds to the upper deck, and with universal, soul maddening yell shouts, 'Vive la republique!' sinking, sinking. She staggers, she lurches, her last drunk whirl. Ocean yawns abysmal; down rushes the Vengeur, carrying 'Vive la republique!' along with her, unconquerable, into eternity."

Rear Admiral Griffiths, at the time a lieutenant on board the Culloden, wrote to a newspaper to show that Carlyle's account had no foundation in fact. After investigation Carlyle admitted that not a word of this thrilling story was true except that the Vengeur sank.
